Dawn came quietly, streaking the sky pink and green. The air grew chillier, sweeter with country scents. Faith rode a stiff dream at him. He was black and white in dawn, his profile chiselled under the fedora-brim of his top hat. He sat rigid, impassive, masking his thoughts, but you could see what a strain he was under.

Her heart ached for him in his pride, his distress. There was nothing he could possibly do except wait, as surely he was waiting, until he caught Stevens off guard. And Faith doubted that would happen. She closed her eyes. She didn't care where they were going. She didn't care what was ahead of them now that she was unbelievably near him. Even that he loved Gertrude seemed a sitting and softly crying behind them, didn't seem to matter. He was unaddressable. At least he was now. She meant nothing to him—now that she had saved his life, she thought secretly. And wherever they were riding into the unknown, Faith Stevens had said she was responsible.

"Take the Hutchinson River Parkway," Stevens ordered hastily. Gertrude's voice rose in hysterical protest. "Haven't we had enough of this, Phillip? It's a wonder I'm not dead now without that horrible revolver. Because Hunter and I want out together tonight—"

"You lied to me," Stevens snarled. "I warned you yesterday—"

"Why shouldn't I lie to you? she replied. "You make my life a mockery with your jealousy. The most harmless things—"

Faith started out of a half doze. She sank back, staying a little in her exhaustion so that her head brushed Hunter's shoulder. She righted herself with a confused "Oh, I'm sorry—"

"It's a rotten shame he had to drag you into this," Hunter murmured. It was the first direct notice he had taken of her.

Faith straightened her hat, tucked back a stray tendril of hair. "I don't mind," she said gallantly. "It is likely to do anything," she added under her breath.

Hunter nodded. "I had a man like that in my regiment during the war."

Faith flushed with delight. A sort of intimacy had been established between them; she felt.

"Turn to the right," Stevens commanded.

The light gilded the fields. Faith gleamed in pale golds with the tinge of the birch leaf in her eyes. Apple trees, frail in bloom, waltzing against delicate skies. There was the odor of lilacs in the air as they passed white houses and gardens.

Gertrude's head sank back, relaxed with maybe, that damn pride of yours and do what I tell you to."

She risked a glance at the back of the car. Stevens sat stiffly on the edge of his seat. His face was drawn with fatigue, but there was no yielding in the set of his jaw. His hand, hair hidden by Gertrude's white satin wrap, never wavered.

Gertrude lay back, her eyes closed, the rich black of her hair toned from its centre peak, drawn forward under her hat. Long clenched curves caught the morning sun.

"We'll soon be there," Stevens said to Faith with a crooked little smile. "You'll see a small town on your right," he told Barclay. "Drive through it. Stop at the third house beyond the church. That's where we earth were they going. Faith wondered.

Hunter slowed down. "I'll not stop anywhere until you tell me what the thing is," he said firmly.

"You're taking an awful risk for Gertrude," Stevens said softly. "Are you sure it's worth it?"

"Now what?" he asked somberly. As if he had been saving up his strength for this moment, Stevens thrust his head forward, his eyes fixed on the young man.

"You've never been married man, Barclay," he said heavily. "You don't know the tortures I've been through watching you and my wife. This is my last gamble for peace, and it's a matter of life or death with me. If I'm right, when you walk out of this house you're going into prison. Personally, my wife will never want to see you again."

Faith leaned against the seat, her heart beating so rapidly that she could hardly breathe.

"As old friend of mine, Justice of Peace McKew, lives in that house, Barclay," Stevens said, indicating his dry lips. "You're getting married this morning."

"But Mr. Stevens—" Gertrude cried faintly.

Stevens looked at Faith. "To this young woman who saved his life," he said.

FORCED MARRIAGE

CHAPTER EIGHT

No one moved. Philip Stevens handled his gun as if he were weighing it in the still sunlight. His head cocked a little to one side. "You prefer that, don't you, my dear, to the alternative?" he said at last to Gertrude.

It was a dream, Faith told herself. That was Hunter Barclay, the exclusive, fashionable million-aire sportsman sitting near her. Being told that he must marry her. And Gertrude Stevens, one of the most unapproachable women in New York society, was here, too, begging Faith to save her.

"You seem pretty sure this young lady will marry me," Hunter challenges, as if he were sparring for time.

Faith felt suddenly hurt, humiliated. What did these people think of her? Using her to suit their own ends, handing her around like a shabby coin. "I'm not at all sure I want to marry anyone," she burst out. "You're just trying to frighten us, Mr. Stevens."

Hunter turned his haggard face to her. "If you feel that way—" he began, without conviction.

Confronted with fear, Gertrude leaned over, clutching at Faith's arm. "You can't let him kill me," she cried. "You've got to go through with it. For God's sake, Hunter, can't you see he means it?" Her beautiful white hands, brilliant with rings, fluttered in an agonies of terror. "I can't bear it much longer—"

"I have borne it in various forms, my dear, for five years," Stevens reminded her with tragic dignity.

Faith looked from one to the other, color hot in her cheeks, as a bewildering joy crowded everything else from her heart. "I'll do it," she said falsely.

Hunter's gaze measured the older man once more. Then his black eyes sought Gertrude Stevens. "You win," he said curtly to Philip.

There was no answering triumph to Philip Stevens' short nod. He got out of the car stiffly, waiting for the others. His gun was back in his overcoat pocket, his hand on it, bulging out the pocket as he stood next to Gertrude.

"A last word of advice," he said. "There are no inquisitive servants in this house, Mrs. McKew isn't—very observing. And my old friend Parkway never considers it other people's business. So don't expect help. If you start anything," Stevens looked at his wife with grim humour. "Well, my dear, you're appropriately gowned for a wedding or a funeral."

Faith and Hunter walked up the narrow path bordered with grass. The scent of lilacs hung in the fresh air. There was a border of Jonquils and narcissus along the porch. Pungent odors of coffee drifted from the back of the house.

An elderly woman opened the door. She stood gaping at them through her spectacles. She wore a pink gingham dress and her cap was white hair was rolled in nobby curling pins.

"Why if it isn't Mr. Stevens!" she mumbled.

Stevens spoke with forced gayety. "Surprised to see me, aren't you, Mrs. McKew. Frank home? Tell him some friends of mine want to get married right away, will you?"

But she followed them to put a crocheted cushion on the still upholstered sofa, and straighten the album on the walnut table. "I'll have fried things up if I'd known," she apologized. "Coffee's ready and I have some real nice biscuits—"

Antidote-Plus Action

Faith stood by the window. She was in a daze. The smell of flowers refreshed her. The country seemed to be drinking in the color of a brook. Any moment she would awaken in her own bed. It's silly, she told herself, but the others had fallen into the background. She could picture the appearance of Mr. McKew.

He came trotting in, a round, rosy-cheeked little man, who had heartedly donned his best suit.

"We're married, Philip," he said otherwise. "Saying Quick this morning!" He rubbed his pudgy hands his bright eyes twinkling from Faith to Hunter. They were white eyes, Faith thought, as if Stevens had probably seen a lot queerer things than these.

Gertrude, deathly pale, moved back against the flowered wall of the parlor. Stevens close to her.

Mr. McKew puttered with paper on the table. "It's not usual, but I guess I can fix you up to oblige Phil," Stevens. He smiled shyly. "You and Mrs. Stevens witness, Philip?"

"Gertrude, my dear—" Stevens looked at his wife, whose hand gripped the back of a chair. "Our in the family is enough, Frank. Perhaps Mr. McKew won't mind bringing the other witness." His smile going to relax his vigilance.

"Sure, sure, no bother. We've been married 32 years," said Mr. McKew impressively. "Ma-ma!" he called.

Faith moved forward and offered her aide Hunter. She felt suddenly horrifically alone among strangers. It was all so different from the wedding day she had imagined. She wanted a long white satin dress like the one Gertrude was wearing. Lilies. Hundred of candles, and organ music. Attendants, and in church.

"Have you a ring?" Mr. McKew was asking Hunter. "It isn't necessary, but some of the young people insist on it."

From behind them Philip Stevens' dry voice sounded. "I'm sure my wife would be delighted to lend her ring to Mr. Barclay. Just as a matter of sentiment, Gertrude?"

How cruel of him, Faith thought, passionately. How cruel. Every word, every moment, every hour of his existence Hunter's nerves must have been trembled. Every nerve of him quivering with anguish. Now he'll get a ring in New York," he said shortly.

In her sweet husky voice, Faith answered questions, signed her name where they told her to. There seem to have been bells ringing out on the dream wedding day. Her bridegroom, handsome and splendid, would look at her with love in his dark eyes.

But Hunter didn't look at her. He stood with his head going through a business transaction, Faith thought bitterly. Mrs. McKew was the most romantic soul there, she wanted to burst out crying to Mrs. McKew's motherly arms. Instead she found herself being married literally at pistol's point.

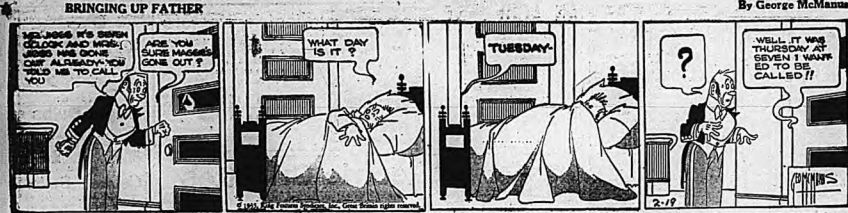
Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking and thinking in his private chair and ma was reading at the newspaper, saying. Well, it's happened. Ross Hilla has finally settled on a solution for dreamy eyed Stover Stevens the most outstanding brute in the whole Hollywood colony and if the judge doesn't grant her a divorce with his compliments it will just go to show that justice is an imaginary thing like Santa Claus and the tooth fairy. Willyum why do they half to keep alluding to the plaintiff and the defendant and the defendant and the plaintiff? It's just spoiling the whole account for me. Almost every time I think they're referring to Ross Hilla Stevens as either Stover Stevens and vice versa, ma said.

That's simple enough it you'll remember that plaintiff means complainer. Pop and ma both complained Ross Hilla is complaining about Stover Stevens in order to get a divorce, in other words that the plaintiff, he said, and ma said, but they both failed to have enough to complain about. She complains that she thought her reputedly dear eyes bragged that she was the most bewitful purchasing bag in Hollywood, and so she complains that he was constantly dodging a barrage of dishes and glassware that she herled at him regardless of expense, so that makes complainees or plaintiffs or whatever you call them out of Willyum I know how I'll remember Defendants, with D and it does adorable, and that's just what she is adorable, pop said.



I always thawt in my innocent way that adorable starts with an A, pop said, and ma said, Yes of course, but the way I think of it, it's the A in adorable.

And furthermore she isn't the defendant at all, you gods she's the plaintiff, pop said, and ma said, Well then whenever the article mentions plaintiff I'll think of it as defendant, and that will naturally bring me to adorable or Stover, and That's the simplest way out of it for me, she said.

And she kept on reading about it and looking as if she understood it better instead of worse.

Creeping slowly forward, the ape-man finally reached the sheltering shadows just inside the sentry fires. Stealthily he moved from building to building, when suddenly he was discovered by a large dog, who came toward him, growling.

Tarzan stood motionless beside a tree. He could see uniformed men moving about in the lighted bungalow. He hoped the dog would not bark! A door opened; a man stepped out and with all the vicious impetuosity of Numa, the lion, the animal charged.

The dog was as large as Dango, the hyena. As he came on, Tarzan knew that he must kill this dog shot through the air for the ape-man's throat. But he was dealing with no man now, for his quickness was more than matched by Tarzan's own.

His teeth never reached the ape-man's flesh. Fingers of steel seized the beast's neck. It gave a single, startle yelp, clawing at the naked breast before him, but was powerless. Just then the man in the door pulled out.

Revolution Among Paris Fashion Designers Promises Sensational Styles for Spring

This is the first of two articles from Paris, revealing advance dope on women's fashions for 1935.

By CORALIE VAN PAASEN

Central Press Canadian Writer

PARIS, Feb 19.—In an atmosphere of high-excitement and mysterious rumors of a pending revolution, the great style-salons of the world's capital of fashion opened their doors this year to the largest group of foreign buyers and experts which has assembled in Paris since the depression set in five years ago. Precautions even stricter than usual were enforced this year to guard against intrusion of copyists and chiselers during the preliminary showing of the models on which the master-designers of Paris and hundreds of thousands of midinettes and modistes have worked in secret since last autumn.

To prevent unauthorized persons from copying the newly-created styles, the couturiers had decided not to allow publication of photographs until three weeks after the opening of the spring-shows. Although this measure will in the end not prevent unscrupulous copyists from flooding the market with stolen ideas, these human parasites are at least held back for the better part of a month, thus giving the couturiers an opportunity of being first in presenting their own marvelous creations to their clientele.

Every boat coming into France has been discharging hosts of buyers for weeks gone by. Not only from North America, but also from the Argentine, Chili and Brazil, the women of South America being counted amongst the most elegantly dressed in the world. For the first time in years there were also buyers from Italy, Signor Mussolini having relented somewhat (seeing that there is no use dictating to women anyway—only men are meek) from his famous determination to create a distinctive feminine Fascist style in his country. From Berlin and Vienna number of buyers, but not that of fashion-writers, is smaller than last year, and from Russia, which was at one time the greatest customer of French fashions, nobody appeared and nobody had been expected.

Experts From Canada

The great department stores of North America, Canada and the United States, have sent experts and buyers by the score, specialists for every branch of women's wear—and for the host of small, seemingly inconsequential articles which are nevertheless not neglected by the women of the world in rounding out her appearance to the highest possible state of attractiveness. Experts are here who deal exclusively with shoes others with lingerie, jewelry, hats, hosiery, linen-wear, handbags, purses and other leather articles, as well as the great arbiters of style in the American cities, who have come to look over and select afternoon gowns, wedding dresses, street wear and formal wear, from the simplest (which are the most regal styles), to the most sensationally exotic and seductive creations affected by stage and motion picture stars.

Speaking of the screen, it stands to reason that a star cannot appear in a movie depicting a high-life society plot or in an ultra-modern dance club scene, let us say, wearing a gown which is antiquated in the slightest detail. Since the great screen releases are often months and months in the making, the directors must therefore have advance information on coming styles. They cannot wait till the new styles are officially announced and shown. Joan Crawford or La Harlow, cannot come out in a picture next fall wearing a gown or a coat or a piece of lingerie, which, in so far as style is concerned, shows unmistakable evidence of carrying the imprint of last autumn's ideas.

Hollywood Depends On Paris

Hence the motion picture directors are in the know months in advance. Other mortals, even the chiefs of the great dress emporiums of New York, must bide their time. The secret of the gods is not revealed a minute before the appointed hour. Hence also the continual va-et-vien between Hollywood and Paris of men like Ernest Lubitsch and Joseph Schenck and other prominent screen directors, with their style experts. They come here to Paris to study tendencies in fashion. I know full well that Hollywood is bringing out some fashions itself these last few years. But Hollywood gets its ideas in Paris. No doubt about that!

When an American screen director arrives to visit the offices of one of the great vogue-kings, such as Monsieur Gaston, of Phillipe et Gaston, or Jean Patou or Lucien Lelong or Maggy Rouff, the utmost secrecy attends these co... tions, as you may imagine. Detectives are on guard. But even tod... in the so-called public showings of next spring's m... be thought for a minute that the word "public" in ... signifies that the doors of the splendid salons are standing open to every Tom, Dick and Harry. Only accredited buyers and recognized fashion writers are admitted. One must indeed show credentials and pass through a rigid scrutiny, first of uniformed guards outside, and then once more submit to the questioning of efficient and snappy young secretaries. These regulations are never relaxed. No exceptions are made. The losses of couturiers through the work of chiselers have been staggering in the past in spite of an almost frantic system of secrecy.

Salons Like Palaces

Redecorated for the occasion, the great salons in their majestic splendor, offer one the illusion of entering fairy palaces these days. Once all the formalities behind, great plate-glass doors swing open as by magic, astonishing lighting effects greet the eye and passing through thick carpeted hallways and rooms, where a crowd of buyers and experts is assembled in an atmosphere of keen expectancy, one finally enters the showroom where the mannequins appear on a small stage or walk about the floor showing off the new creations, in which has gone the work of hundreds of thousands of people — the second largest industry in France.

Revolt of Designers

You may gather an idea of the tensity of the situation, the pent-up fever of the hour of revelation when I tell you that in going the rounds of the exhibitions these last few days, I was told on two occasions that the head of the house, the great stylist himself, could not possibly talk to me — not because he was too busy putting on the finishing touches—but because he was exhausted with nervousness. C'est la vie!

The revolution in the fashion world this year, of which so much has been written already, occurred while most of the foreign buyers were still on the high seas on their way to Paris. Two prominent couturiers, Messieurs Jean Patou and Marcel Rochas, made the sensational announcement that they had withdrawn from the P.A.I.S. (Protection Artistique des Industries Saisonnieres) and intended henceforth to hew a lone trail. Both Patou and Rochas belong to the younger and more progressive style creators. The organization they left represented heretofore the united dress-designers of France and enforced among its members a uniform price fixing system and other measures to protect the industry. The organization also, in general council assembled, decided before to be adopted by all, leaving the details to be worked out by individual creators. This is finished now for the association will most likely break up.

The masters of feminine style are in secret session in Paris preparing for the "big show"—the presentation of spring fashions for 1935. Above is seen: (1) M. Gaston, head of famous house of Phillipe et Gaston, and a famous designer. (2) M. Jean Charles Worth. (3) M. Jean Patau, a revolutionary in the art of feminine dress design, and (4) Lucien Lelong, famous designer, whose articles appear in The Ontario Intelligencer from time to time.

OTTAWA, Feb. 19.—The Government's Unemployment Insurance scheme was aimed at preserving privilege of the capitalists to exploit the working class, Tim Buck, Toronto Communist, told 3,000 people in the Coliseum Building here last night. It was hypocritical and an insult to the men now on relief.

The large auditorium was filled with a quiet and attentive crowd who listened to the youthful-looking organizer.

LETTERS ARE READ AT VERMILYEA TRIAL

STAINS OF BLOOD OF HUMAN BEING FOUND ON HATCHET

Dr. Edgar Frankish, Medico-Legal Expert Called to Stand

EXAMINATION OF CAR

Will of Dead Woman is Read in Court Before Jury

Wednesday afternoon session of the Vermilyea trial resumed with Mr. Chas. Cameron, on the stand. Mr. Cameron, a barrister and solicitor of the city, knew the late Mrs. Vermilyea personally. The will of the deceased, drawn by him, was produced. It read: "The will, read in court by Mr. Donnan, was entered in the record, through a copy furnished. The will directed the executors to divide the estate equally among Helen Faulkner, Arthur Vermilyea, Clarence and Ernest Vermilyea. It had been drawn in 1923.

The extent of the estate of deceased showed somewhere in excess of $40,000, said Mr. Cameron.

Question by Col. Greer revealed that accused would have received the bulk of the estate, or $10,000. No new will or codicil had ever been made, said Mr. Cameron, to the best of his knowledge.

Defence sought to ask the question of whether the heirs of a person convicted of a killing could share in the will. It was admitted by the court.

"One who commits a crime, if convicted of the crime, and is a beneficiary of the heir, is not entitled to share in any bequest in the event of death," replied Mr. Cameron. Mr. Justice Wright then took the question up with him, he added.

Dr. Edgar Frankish

Dr. Edgar Frankish, medico-legal expert of the Attorney-General's Department in charge of the laboratory of the department for the past 9 1-2 years, three first established, previous to that, under questioning of Mr. Urquhart, Crown Prosecutor, he had majored in "legal medicine" for the department, he testified. Post mortem examinations, stain examinations and blood examinations were specialties he had studied. This work also included comparisons of hair. Some five or six years' schooling in science had led to this.

Scientific Method Known

Q.—Is there a scientific method for determining the presence of human blood on an object? A. There is—the test is known all over the world.

The stain left, Dr. Frankish said, receiving a hatchet at the department from Detective Sergeant Wright. When received on Sat., Oct. 6, 1934) there were brownish stains on the head, also hair on the handle engages the head.

These stains were still visible on the hatchet, it was pointed out by him when the tool was handed him for identification.

There were other stains on the serrated head.

Blood Stains on Hatchet

Holding the hatchet before the jury, Witness pointed to each spot where the stains were visible.

He examined these spots and see if they were human blood stains—the tests were positive the stains were human blood stains", explained the medico.

On the heart of the hatchet small clusters of hair were found adhering. The hair was put into a test tube, (exhibited and identified on the stand) The hairs were found to be human ones.

Hairs of Rat Family

"The other hair examined witness "I found to belong to the 'rat' family. Witness explained specks of blood—"I found on the human hair, grey, was found on the blade of the hatchet. This hair I was of similar color as deceased's.

"Hair can not be identified as belonging to any certain individual" methodically explained witness.

A coat found was identified by witness as one given him by Sergeant Harman. Several stains found on it were analyzed and found to be of human blood. The hair colour, compared with that found on the head of the hatchet and found to match, for the hairs of that of the 'rat' family.

Pants also stained, was found to have been "splotched" with human blood.

Q. (by Mr. Urquhart) What was the next article you received? A.—I examined a motor car on the 7th Sunday. It had been delivered to the police garage. I met there one John Bannas. He was accompanied by Inspector Ward.

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Greenock, Scotland, Feb. 20 (CP)—Not without a struggle, the corporation of Greenock on the Clyde today resolved by a vote of 11 to 7 not to take part in the celebrations of the Silver Jubilee of the King's Accession. The resolution explained expenditures would not be fitting "because of the unemployment in the town."

Ballee Mrs. McLeod described the King as "a wee, wee man" when she attended her of her father.

Ottawa, Feb. 20 (CP)—James Woodside revealed today he owns a cat he thinks should go queer before he has heard of. It has the correct total number of toes but they are distributed wrong, six on each fore-foot and four on each hind foot. Something happened to its tail which is trailed like a dilapidated overstrung screw. It jumps around like a rabbit.

witness was telling what had been told or given him. Witness continued.

A.—What kind of a car was it?

A.—A Cadillac, a sedan.

A.Yes.

Examination of the back seat and floor and some scrapings from the front seat below the floor, on the passenger's side, revealed that in the rear portion of the car the tests were negative. On the front part, the tests were positive. This proved traces of stains in the front of the machine.

TAKES STAND

Spots on Pants Leg

A blue suit of clothes had been found in accused's car after search and tests for strains.

A pair of low shoes and two overcoats were also examined. Nothing on the coat or the vest of the suit was found. On the left leg of the pants, witness had examined fourteen spots on the right. Two of these spots were found positive, denoting blood. The left leg of the pants cut and stain was tested. It proved negative.

On the handle of the hatchet, witness first observed some "greasy" substance. This proved to be 37.7%.

Photographs

Defense made no objection at this time to the photographs. "I don't see any necessity of admitting them," objected Col. Greer.

"It is quite usual," replied Justice Wright.

Q.—(By Mr. Urquhart) Is there any doubt in the hatchet received by you? A.—No, I identified it myself.

"Dr. Frankish, you have better eyesight than I," remarked Justice to the court after a careful scrutiny.

"And he had better eyesight than I," the Crown attorney added.

"I have a little more practice than that's why I object," added defence Counsel.

Several full size photographs of the hatchet were passed around the courtroom by Mr. Urquhart for inspection by the jury.

Sanity of Relatives Is Traced by Witness In Cross-Examination

Relatives of Vermilyea Described as to Mental State

'DISAGREEABLE' LETTER

Money Matters Are Spoken of By Sister

Question of the mental state of some relatives of the accused, Harold W. Vermilyea, arose in this morning's testimony. At his trial on the charge of murder of his mother, Mrs. Aurelia Vermilyea, at Consecon on October 4, 1934.

Mrs. Aurelia Vermilyea, Mrs. J. A. Faulkner, was being cross-examined by Col. Greer, counsel for the defence

The cold which several jurors and the majority of the spectators on the trial of Harold Vermilyea have been suffering from during the past few days, had spread to the prisoner overnight. Vermilyea entered the court room at 9.40 o'clock this morning carrying with, his air cushion and a cold over the eastern area. The coat was of the same material as the dark brown tweed suit and completed the ensemble.

Only when the court crier opens the day's session is he on hand to directly face the court.

Today's session opened with the testimony of Mrs. (Dr.) Faulkner, sister of the accused, to the stand; being sworn by the witness.

Mrs. Faulkner, still dressed in black, had the same composed bearing as on Tuesday.

A lithe was produced by defence which entire of the birth of the Vermilyea children had been made.

Harold Vermilyea at Yeti Bellville first in 1908, said his sister. At one time accused had an impediment in his speech. He had spent several years in Vancouver and then had gone to California.

Since he left first, Vermilyea had been back only three times. The last time was in 1923.

Aware of Contents

Col. Greer referred to Mrs. Vermilyea's will. Witness had not been present, when it had been drawn, but all members of the family were fairly well aware of the contents said Mrs. Faulkner. "It had been drawn up in accordance with our father's will," she added.

Q.—As far as you know did your mother ever make any change from the original will as drawn? A.—No.

Q.—Accused, your brother might have made some other minor bequests?

Q.—As far as you know, was anything ever said to accused about your brother's estate?

Q.—Was he ever changing her will? A—No.

Wrote Irregularly

"Harold Vermilyea left Belleville to get a wider education," said witness. During his time away he wrote irregularly but of late years had corresponded fairly regularly—for the last twenty years, a letter would be received at least once a week. "Nearly always the letters had been written by my mother," added witness.

Q.— What was the relationship between your mother and her son? A—He was very affectionate towards her.

Q—Do you now whether or not your brother was divorced? A—He was—about five years ago.

Witness told of spending a visit with her brother at his California home.

FINANCIAL AID IS BROUGHT UP AS DESIRABLE

$5,000 And $1,000 Are Mentioned in Two Letters

ESTATE NOT PROBATED

Mrs. (Dr.) J. A. Faulkner, daughter of the late Mrs. Aurelia Vermilyea, resumed the stand at three-thirty o'clock Tuesday afternoon, when the jury came back after mid-afternoon recess in the Vermilyea murder trial. Mr. Urquhart continued his questioning. She looked at letters received by her mother from brothers and identified the signature of H. W. Vermilyea on them.

A letter of April 17th, produced and purportedly sent by the accused, Harold W. Vermilyea, and his mother from Ontario, Calif., was then seen her before, said witness as she identified it.

Say Mother's Mail

Mother nearly always showed me her mail, witness further contained an answer to one written by Mrs. Vermilyea. A lengthy message, it dwelt upon family affairs, with considerable attention devoted to the simple philosophies of the writer.

Paragraph In Letter

One paragraph read: " . . . We can get down home and are still eating, but the orange business has produced not one cent of profits." At this point the letter drew attention to the hardships of orange growing. Property had greatly depreciated in price. "The building and loan associations have practically property on their hands that they cannot get loans except with difficulty."

The letter referred to the four children of Mrs. Vermilyea and a hope was that all would share alike.

TWO MORE SPIES MAY BE BEHEADED

Already Convicted of Espionage And in Prison

By A. D. Stefferud

Berlin, Feb. 20—(AP)—The enormous ramifications of international spy axe fell today upon two more convicted spies held in Fluetzensee prison.

The two, who may follow the same fate as the four already taken by Benita Von Falkenhayn and Reinhold Von Kleinmayr, men, one of it was learned, is a former naval technician but the identities of both were veiled in deepest secrecy.

Their condemned pair occupied cells near those in which the two noblewomen spent their last hours. Like the four who preceded them to fate other than the grim traditional Prussian executioner's axe, Fluetzensee's walls alive and free.

Several days must pass before the death executioner is notified to sharpen his medieval battle-axe and the blade of his weapon.

Meanwhile, the prisoners may cling to their last hopes—appealing Hitler will intervene to modify their death sentences.

Unlike the two women spies the men were tried several weeks ago in secret session.

The decapitation of the two women continued to create a nation-wide sensation today as the selection of the Reichswehr charged with anti-espionage activities redoubled its efforts to round up betrayers of German military secrets.

OTTAWA YOUTHS TAKEN IN CITY FOR CAR THEFT

Alleged They Stole Car in Ottawa, it Being Wrecked Near Shannonville

ONE MAKES ESCAPE

After Being Booked, Leaves by Side Door of Police Station

Five Ottawa youths were arrested by provincial Police early Sunday, near the O.N.R. coal chutes on charges of automobile theft, breaking, entering and theft at two gasoline stations, driving an car and attempt to chase through the vicinity directly north of Shannonville. The five lads were brought to the local police station to be locked up, but after ascertaining their names and addresses, only four could be accounted for, one having escaped from the clutches of the police apparently through a side door at the police station.

The five lads gave their home address as Ottawa and their names which formed the basis of municipal expenditure, government assumption of highway costs, local health administration, reduction of interest on farm loans and improvement of the system of producing and disposing of dairy products.

The speech announced the labor legislation which Hon. A. W. Roebuck, Attorney General and Minister of Labor, has forecast to give binding effect to voluntary collective agreements between employers and employees.

Widespread unemployment has been one of the major problems with which the government had to deal. The speech listed improvement of relief and the creation of a new department of municipal affairs.

Reduce Interest.

"In order to prevent unwise issue of debentures resulting in oppressive taxation in municipalities a bill will be introduced requiring the sanction of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board."

Turning to agriculture, the Lieutenant-Governor referred to government activities in reduction on farm loans by the Agricultural Development Board, and relief to four per cent. Maintenance of a system of grading, inspection of cheese, creameries, matches and smokers' canneries were found and their persons leading the police to believe, that a robbery had been completed by the youths. They refused to divulge from whence they came, but police say their stories however.

The names, ages and addresses of the five youths were taken at the sergeant's desk at the police station by Constable Ernest Trimble. Trimble's wife and children were then removed to the office of the Provincial Police, while the other four were herded into the police cells in the basement. In the process of placing the prisoners in the cell block, it is believed, that Albert Jones took advantage of the unlocked street door at the police station and made his escape.

Later this afternoon the youths all appeared before Magistrate R. Deacon, the Province's police magistrate and were remanded in custody while further evidence was investigated. The car that was stolen and wrecked near Shannonville, is the property of Mrs. Lyon and Son of Ottawa. The Ottawa police were notified of the arrests early today.

Health Unit May Be Organized in Eastern Ontario

Toronto, Feb 20—(CP)—Revision of the system of taxation for support of primary and secondary schools in Ontario was forecast today in the Speech from the Throne read by Hon. H. A. Bruce, Lieutenant-Governor, at the opening of the first session of the province's 19th legislature.

The speech said an intensive survey of taxation laws in force was made "with a view to such revision of the methods of local taxation and system of provincial grants as will make possible a more satisfactory and equitable distribution of the cost of education throughout the province."

The broad field of Ontario activities was touched upon by the speech which forecast consideration of municipal expenditure, government assumption of highway costs, local health administration, reduction of interest on farm loans and improvement of the system of producing and disposing of dairy products.

The speech announced the labor legislation which Hon. A. W. Roebuck, Attorney General and Minister of Labor, has forecast to give binding effect to voluntary collective agreements between employers and employees.

TWEED — Monday, February 18th, marked the ninety-third milestone in the life of Mr. Samuel Bowers, "Tweed's grand old gentleman." Mr. Bowers is well known in this community, as he has resided in Hungerford Township and Tweed Village for practically his entire life. He has distinct recollections of the time when the dwellings of the village numbered only five log houses, long before the railway was put through this district,—living in Belleville in those days was a real experience, with oxen or horses and required almost as many hours as it does minutes in this age with fleet motor cars and highways. The trail, for it was little better than that, was marked with swamps and logs to be crossed and streams to be forded, particularly difficult in the spring.

Hungerford Township was solid bush when Mr. Bowers first came to make his home. He made a small clearing and started a log building for a home. Trees had to be cut down and stumps removed to make a place for the first bowing of grain. Ploughing was done with oxen and harrowing by hand with the flail.

In his early days Mr. Bowers shanzied and "drove the river" with the lumbermen. He once rode from a log on the Moira River. He was an employee of Flint and Holton and that, Belleville, for shipbuilding and many interesting experiences. One incident he related from his days up this hazardous employment has the companionship of a huge mountain of fascinating.

Samuel Bowers was born on the fourth concession of Thurlow Township, a son of Britton Bowers and Charlotte Orser. Many years afterwards he came to Hungerford Township and in 1910 retired to Tweed Village, where he has spent the past fifteen years. He is up and about, has never been ill a day in his life, and has never worn glasses. He is a member of Tweed United Church and has been a regular attendant for many years. He is also a member of Tweed Lodge No. 429, A.F. & A.M., and has been a member for 60 years.

Mr. Bowers was married to Miss Mary Ann Bell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bell, Hungerford Township, and they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1910. Mrs. Bowers died in 1917. Mr. Bowers has been survived by one son, Britton Bowers, Tweed Village, and one daughter, Mrs. Ida Bell, Hungerford Township. There are also nine grandchildren and twenty-one great-grandchildren.

Mr. Bowers is a keen reader and has always taken a great interest in current events. He has been a staunch supporter of the Conservative party and has always been interested in politics. He has been a member of the Orange Order for 60 years.

Mr. Bowers is in good health and spirits and enjoys a visit from his friends. He is looking forward to the time when he will be able to get out in the garden and work among the flowers and vegetables.

Motorman Found Dead After Disturbance in House

Montreal, Feb. 20.—(CP)—Police today discovered Cedeore Demers, 42-year-old Tramways motorman, dead in his garage with a bullet in his head shortly after his wife had been rushed to the hospital with deep gashes in her throat and a gash in the head. It was reported Mrs. Demers did not divulge how she was injured.

Mrs. Demers was reported in a serious condition at the hospital. Several operations on her head were performed in the hope to save her life.

A taxicab rushed the woman to hospital with her family physician in attendance. He turned her over to the hospital surgeons. Meanwhile police had been called by neighbors, Capt. Joseph Dandurand in the Demers' home. The officers reached the little home on Ste. Antoine Street and the Sergeants had left for the hospital. They spent some time searching the house before finding the body of Demers stretched out on the garage floor at the rear of the house. He had been dead several hours, it was estimated.

Neighbors said Mrs. Demers was a dressmaker and the couple had four children, three boys and a girl.

Physicians in St. Luke's Hospital said there was only a slight chance for the baby to survive, depending on how it gives up all hope of making a connection between the throat and the stomach.

Hon. Robert Weir Tells Canadian Horticultural Council

MARKETING ACT

Minister Says He Has Discussed Act But Little

OTTAWA, Feb. 20.—(CP)—Two possibly three, investigations of price spreads between producer and consumer of agriculture products will be made under provisions of the Marketing Act, Minister of Agriculture Robert Weir told the Canadian Horticultural Council at its 12th annual meeting.

"I've never discussed the Act for more than five minutes previously from a public platform," he said, "because I wanted to keep it out of the political arena. I feel unfortunate the Act was passed in a year preceding a Federal election. It has thrust on the Act opposition which has come from members of my own political party as well as those opposed and even from some producers and jobbers of Agriculture products.

"The great powers of the Marketing Act to influence Briefing of foreign tariff walls were not clearly understood even by Mr. Weir and the Tariffs against agricultural products were raised by politicians capitalizing fears of producer groups in their own countries.

Tariff Stakes

"In the United States he declared representatives of cattle States combined with those from cotton and apple States in an attitude of you scratch my back and I'll scratch yours. The cattle men pointed with alarm to the prospect of the United States market being flooded with Canadian cattle imported to stock cheaper lands. The result was increased tariff barriers.

"The Marketing Act was a guarantee against Foreign Markets being flooded with Canadian products," he explained. Exports were made by quotas worked by intelligent survey of market requirement.

"Once a foreign market has been gained at great cost," Mr. Weir said, "it can only be held by continuity of supply." Under the Marketing Act continuity could be gained but only by an effort of producers themselves.

He told how Canada had gone into the United States Apple market under the Ottawa agreements spending millions of dollars in exporters. A great demand was built up and then during August and September Canadian growers could not supply the demand. English importers had lost a large part of their investment creating the market for Canadian apples. Why was not the fault of Canadian Packers who took advantage of the increased price in the Domestic Market? It was the fault of the producer, who, because it was cheaper to ship hogs in spring and in the fall, left the export market vacant of continuity of supply during August and September.

Apple Men on Alert

The Fruit Act was more radical than the Marketing Act, in Mr. Weir's opinion. Apple men were on the alert and by co-operation with British inspectors had established good results. The United Kingdom Market had been saved from flooding by an inferior grade.

Price Spreads between producer and consumer of agricultural products called for more than a "pooh" investigation Mr. Weir said. What is needed was investigation of from six months to a year.

"Call it unfair profit, or too great a toll, but whatever it is called, the investigation to be of benefit must get the fact that the producer gets less and the consumer pays more," he said. Here he revealed, two possible times. Investigations would be under the Act, but he did not state what products would be investigated.

He invited representatives of agricultural groups meeting in Ottawa this week to form a Canadian Chamber of Agriculture to function in Agriculture as does the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in industry—to submit recommendations.

WITH some people the digestion of certain foods is difficult. More acid is formed than the stomach requires. This causes "repeats" or sensations. Sometimes these "risings" are extremely sour with acrid. If neglected, over-acidity can lead to more serious result. Either omit the foods which "repeat", or neutralize the acid with Bisurated Magnesia. This will immediately give you relief and with no bad after-effects, for this preparation is harmless.

H. Alcombrack, U.S. Air Force, Discusses Aeronautic Research

Is Spending Two Months Furlough in Stirling

Stirling, Feb. 20—Mr. Harold Alcombrack R.P.C. of the United States air force, arrived in Stirling on a two months furlough. Mr. Alcombrack has been connected with the American Air Service for the past six years. During which time he served all their base in Panama zone for three years, and after being transferred to Langley Field, Virginia. He is visiting at the homes of his aunts, while on leave, Mrs. Hickey and Mrs. Arthur Hillis of Stirling, Miss Ella Alcombrack of Frankford, and Mrs. George Snider of Trenton.

Mr. Alcombrack discusses with very apparent pride the great advances made in American aviation, particularly at Langley Field, one of the largest and best equipped flying fields in the world. It covers an area of approximately ten square miles, and being the experimental testing base of the National advisory committee of aeronautics, experiment and research is forever alive. Each year the industry learns more about how to use the National advisory committee of aeronautics and each year, a larger group attends the gathering at Langley Field, where research progress is brought up to date, and plans for the future for the benefit of the entire industry are made.

There is a new appreciation of the committee and its work. It is shared by every important branch of the aeronautical industry that is in its infancy. Visitors include, not only representatives of manufacturers of military air craft and engines, but of medium and light weight commercial planes, operators of transport lines, and members of the aeronautical branch of the department of commerce; all seeking to take advantage of the knowledge gained through the experiments of this committee.

Among the outstanding achievements at Langley Field was the reconstruction of a towing basin, devoted solely to work intended to improve the performance of sea planes and flying boats on the water. (It may be of interest to any who may find the experimental work of the United States for aeronautic research is complete, that there are two wind tunnels, and a new one being erected to seaplane research alone).

The National advisory committee of aeronautics towing tank provides for the most exhaustive tests of speed range of four to fifty eight miles per hour, and the end of this device it is possible to tabulate with reasonable accuracy, through tests

Nation-wide organization of agricultural interests was hampered by suggestion of a levy on individual producers to finance a "continuous" market for products. One farmer said a product for a few cents more than one week than his neighbor got the next and suggestions of a levy of one-tenth of a cent a pound or one-fifteenth of a cent a pound were all received. The minisled invited suggestions to overcome this difficulty.

Langley Field also has to her credit the possession of the largest non rigid blimp known as the Rubber Cow, No. T. C.—13.

Personals

The evening service of St. Paul's United Church was cancelled because of the sad news received by the pastor, Rev. E. W. Rowland, that his brother had passed away in Toronto as soon as circumstances permitted his departure. The sincere sympathy of his many friends go with him in his time of sorrow.

Miss Emma Allen nurse-in-training at Bellefielde hospital was a Sunday visitor at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Middlejohn.

Mr. and Mrs. James Hough and son Douglas of Deseronto, spent the week end at the homes of their parents here, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Hough and Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Linn.

Latest reports from Bellevetie hospital indicate that the condition of Mr. Hamilton Johnson is greatly improved. Mr. Johnson was taken to the hospital in a serious condition on Friday night, when it was thought an operation would be necessary. He took a decided change for the better on Saturday, and his discharge from the hospital and his return home is expected in the near future.

Mrs. Andrew Hay of Campbellford is spending a few days at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Joseph Whitehead.

Mr. J. S. Marshall of Toronto, visited friends in Stirling over the week end.

Mr. and Mrs. George Mason visited friends in Marlbo on Sunday afternoon.

Miss Canna of Belleville, was guest of Mr. and Mrs. James Fitzpatrick on Sunday.

Mr. Ernest Reid spent the week end in Toronto and attended the Maple Leaf Ranger hockey game.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Perry and daughter Shirley, spent Sunday with friends in Wooler.

Mr. Harold Baker was a week end guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Barrager, Belleville.

Mr. Wm. Bolte of Consecon spent the week end with friends on Stirling.

The Sunday evening an unusually large congregation gathered in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church to hear Rev. A. A. Koffend deliver the first of a series of illustrated sermons on the life and teachings of Jesus Christ. Owing to the consolation of the evening service in St. Paul's United Church, because of the bereavement of their minister, Rev. E. W. Rowland, in the loss of his brother, many members and adherents of that church attended the service.

Rev. Koffend laid the foundation of his topic with the aid of very fine lantern slides, by dealing first with the Old Testament prophecies in the birth of Jesus Christ. His early life, the period of questioning in the temple when he asked of his parents: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business."

By vividly did Mr. Koffend portray his theme through the medium of word and picture, that the audience was, as it were, transported back to the era of the actual happenings.

Mr. G. L. Clute, choir master and organist of St. Paul's United Church, contributed his part in this unusually fine service by rendering as a baritone solo: Fear ye not, O Israel, by Dudley Buck.

Mr. Francis Gilfrey was the victim of an unfortunate accident on Monday, Feb. 18, when transporting a load of wood from the farm to Stirling. Bare spots in the road made it necessary to drive in the ditch at some points, Suddenly one of the horses broke through the ice, and lunging forward, pulled him off the load, part of the wood falling over on top of him. The bumpers of both sleighs struck his shoulder, breaking his collarbone. He has also badly bruised, but escaped to keep the horses from running away and they bounded back into the road.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Nicholson was the scene of a delightful Valentine card party on Thursday evening, when they entertained thirty friends from Stirling and Frankford. Card playing was the paramount feature of the entertainment, until midnight when prizes were awarded to the winners. The lady with the highest score was Mrs. Thompson of Frankford. The gentleman, Mr. Roscoe Wright of Stirling. The consolation prizes were won by Mrs. Percival Emery of Stirling and Mrs. Carman Lowes of Frankford.

Lunch was then served in true Valentine fashion. Salads, gaily decorated with tulips and stuffed celery, were made up with pressed meats, all individually moulded in the shape of hearts. Brightly colored servietties made up as roses, and containing the coffee cups were another of the novel ideas which added beauty to this lovely party.

Hotel Men Fed At $12 Apiece

The Hotel Association of New York City sat itself down in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel the other night and consumed a twelve course dinner, embellished with a dozen or so assorted wines and liqueurs. Then it heard Mayor Fiorello La Guardia ask co-operation to guard against return of the evils of the pre-prohibition era. He begged the hotelmen to "stamp out" out sellers of unlicensed liquors.

Prior to the dinner proper, the hotelmen quaffed cocktails, ate hot and cold, and varied cocktails. Among the choice items on the menu: Diamond back terrapin, Welch rarebit, pheasant, Canvasback; Manhattan rock fraise.

It was the fifty-sixth annual dinner of the association, long noted as an occasion for the epicure. The dinner—at $12 per—received forth rounds of praise from the hotelmen, themselves accustomed to the task of feeding the world.

Sees Idealism With Teen Age

MONTREAL, Feb. 20. — (CP)— Outward characteristics of the present generation, its hardy behavior, fits of giggling, rapid changes of mood, its distressing honesty," but underneath it all was a strange idealism, Miss Mary Hill, B.A., reported in her records of Presbyterian Women's Missionary Society, told members of the Montreal Presbyterial at its annual business session today.

The chief aim of girls' work, Miss Hill related, is to make religion a reality to the girls. "A teen age girl wants to be religious, but she wants to be honest, even before the truth," she declared.

Describing work among Chinese girls in Tsamsui, Miss Dorothy Dodds, Montreal, principal of the Girls' School there, remarked that these were changing days in the East as well as in Canada. The young people no longer believed in heathenism, though they might carry out its prescribed rites. "It is much easier to convert a girl to heathen than one who does not believe in anything." Miss Douglas commented.

OPPORTUNITY OF TRADE

The press generally has found the way to increased trade in building up exchange of commodities as has been typified by the Belleville Trade Group. The Mail and Empire speaks of exchange of commodities in these words of a recent editorial:

"There has been a steady increase in Canadian exports to that market during the past year, and an increasingly friendly disposition towards Canadian goods prevails as a result of the present policy of encouraging mutual trade. A noteworthy example is the increased purchases by Canada 'of coal from South Wales which have resulted in the employment of many who would otherwise be unemployed. This has naturally resulted in an increased measure of goodwill towards Canada which may be capitalized in the greater sale of Canadian products.

"Much has been accomplished as a result of intimations that the Canadian authorities are prepared to co-operate in solving the customs problems of the United Kingdom exporters selling in the Canadian market, and evidences are that the Canadian regulations are to be interpreted according to their spirit and intent, as well as in the letter. The visit to England of the chairman of the Canadian Tariff Board and other officials further stimulated the sentiment to which reference has been made. Conversely, the United Kingdom customs authorities continue to display every readiness to assist Canadian exporters to the United Kingdom by reducing difficulties incidental to customs clearances to the necessary minimum."

BARON BYNG BETTER

Canadians are glad to learn that Baron Byng of Vimy, the wartime leader of the Canadian Corps, is greatly improved with a heart condition for which he went to the California coast in an effort to recover his health.

Everywhere throughout the Empire the hope will be that he will be spared to live for many years. He has been given the honors he has earned, and can have bestowed upon him and his friends would like to see him enjoy rest from the active life which he has spent in the interests of his country and empire.

IN NEW YORK CITY PULPITS

Courage and willingness to sacrifice all for a worthy cause are the basic qualities of true greatness, according to Dr. Charles R. Brasman of the Union Theological Seminary preaching in New York on Sunday. "John the Baptist knew that the prophets before him had been crucified, stoned and denied, but he did not refrain from denouncing the sins of his people. He brought a message to his nation proving them to the divine laws and pointing the way to Christ. There are many people in all walks of life, who will follow the crowd and slowly lose all their ideals. But I will take great men, men who believe in law and liberty, who stem the tide of Fascism, Nazism and Communism that has overrun the great nations of this world.

"Easy chair" Catholics were scored by the Rev. Walter P. Kellenberg in a sermon at St. Patrick's Cathedral. "Self-denial, self-discipline, mortification are not popular words today," he said. "The world is doing and has ever done its best to teach us to despise them. All the heresies that crept us today divergent though they may be, are but one thing—flouting self-denial and self-discipline.

"Rapidly our Catholics are becoming impregnated with this fatal error. Some of them look for excuses to free themselves from the sterner side of Christianity, from Lenten discipline for instance. These easy-chair Catholics feel that if they cannot reach heaven on a feather bed, it's a question whether it is worth while to try to reach it at all." Father Kellenberg asked the congregation to begin formulating a Lenten program of self imposed discipline as well as adherence to the church's rules. He added that in contrast with the strict regime which athletes voluntarily impose upon themselves, the Lenten practices recommended by the church are "easy".

"Lack of the true understanding of the practice of worship was characterized by Rev. Raymond Knox at Columbia University as "one of the most conspicuous in impoverishing weaknesses in American life today." From a variety of causes we have permitted worship to decline in our lives. Worship is the heart of religion, because in worship we come into the presence of the living God. In worship we know God for ourselves and not for another. It is to have our eyes opened in a clearer recognition of the reality of God, the Supreme Spiritual Power upon which all life depends, so that we are able to affirm 'I had heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear but now my eye seeth Thee.'"

"Christian fraternalism must go beyond the immediate needs of the neighbor and embrace your whole system of modern life', said the Rev. Dr. Minot Simons, pastor of All Saints Unitarian Church, New York. "Today the question 'Am I my brother's brother?' is searching into our whole philosophy of life, into every business and into every aspect of our citizenship. It is searching our political and economic systems. It is searching our methods of production and our methods of distribution for their consequences in human well-being and in human illbeing. In the present crisis, those consequences are revealing fatal weaknesses and deep-seated wrongs. These consequences are receiving both a spiritual and scientific examination and we cannot ignore such judgments."

The results of inequalities in life are highly beneficial often, even to those humbly born and equality is an impossibility in this world, declared Rev. Dr. J. A. F. Maynard of the Eglise Francais du Saint-Esprit (French Church of the Holy Spirit). "Equality is an ideal not an actuality. There is no equality in the plant world, and the stars are not of equal magnitude and brilliance. Justice is not a natural automatic state. In America we have the social differences that exist between descendants of old families and the sons of immigrants. Some inherit vast fortunes and of these many waste these fortunes. Others have to work hard for very little. Before God, however, all men are equal, for He accepts both the rich and the poor."

At the installation of the Rev. W. Van Davies as assistant pastor of Holy Trinity Lutheran Church, Rev. Dr. Burgess who conducted the installation ceremony said "As we expect from a water company a pure water, we expect from a minister the pure word of God. Davies spoke better than he knew, for he was a man of God. Every faithful minister is the mouthpiece of the Almighty. The motive of a minister must not be to be popular with the people. Especially must he be careful with the ambition to become a great scholar which may lead him to rationalism. Christ and the church have suffered from rationalism."

"People who say that they don't go to church because they prefer to find God and God's work in the outdoors seldom are sincere and honest in this contention," averred Dr. James Moffat, professor of New Testament Union Theological Seminary. Dr. Moffat said that church attendance is essential in every Christian's life. "Religious life begins when a person is able to say, 'I am an companion of God's people—the reverent people who try to carry out His will.' Throughout the ages, he pointed out, the church has been the only place where religious people might cling together.

Courage is the only universally accepted virtue," Dr. Wallace McMullen, Methodist, said. "The violation of truth is considered merely a venial sin by many nowadays and while honesty is considered a virtue there is the distinct caste of thieves in India whose interest in stealing must be protected." The ordinary virtues of decent living have different values at different times and places, he said, adding:

"The one virtue that has the same value all over, is courage. We do not admire virtues like these days, for the courage that is displayed by the under the conditions under which we live gone unrecognized. One reason for our courage today is hope. Dickens' Micawber was always waiting for something to turn up—that is disintegration." Dr. MacMullen cited the story of a blind man who founded a hospital for blinded soldiers where they were trained to be self-dependent and when he died was mourned as 'the conqueror of the giant despair.'

More and more people seek escape from unwholesome fact in the region of make-believe, said Dr. S. M. Shoemaker. "There is no better place in the world to be asking questions whether we live in a real world than inside a church. For there are many people for whom churches provide precisely caves and refuges from reality. 'Trust relevant dead' as in actualities, not in wishes. . . . Christ was not a romanticist. He was a realist who faced life as it was."

MISLEADING FILM TITLES

The peculiarity by which picture producers give misleading names to their pictures, frequently to their own loss, is illustrated by a picture now being shown in a local theatre and known as "Broadway Bill". This is not a New York gangster or high life picture but an entertaining, gripping story of a man in love with a horse and a girl in love with the man and the scenes depict phases of life that are fascinating because they are true.—Port Arthur News-Chronicle.

When it is not despicable to be poor, we want fewer things to live in poverty with satisfaction, than to live magnificent with riches.

Repentance—the golden key that opens the palace of eternity.—Milton.

The slightest sorrow for sin is sufficient if it produce amendment and the greatest insufficient if it do not.—Colton.

Repentance may begin instantly, but reformation often requires a sphere of years.—Henry Ward Beecher.

SOLITUDE

True solitude is like a wall
That safely shuts the world away;
Not even the fairest shoes fall,
Not even the softest whispers stray
Through this strong barrier, night or day.

Man almost to himself grows strange,
So circled in by solitude;
He changes as the seasons change,
Green leaves or red leaves in the wood
In him wake spring's or autumn's mood.

Yet solitude is like a road
Dear hopes and visions pass along
Into the secret heart's abode,
A road where youth returns with song,
Where all once cherished fancies throng.

A LONG STEP backward toward barbarism was made in Germany when two women were executed by beheading, even reverting to the headsman's axe of ancient times. These women of high social standing, one a countess, were convicted of assisting spies secure important military secrets which were sold to France. Being German and being cheap as Nazidand, the women were beheaded. The chief of the alleged spy plot was a Polish military captain who kept open house and entertained lavishly the socially elect with special attention to women in close touch with governmental and military bodies. Gifts of fur coats and much costly jewelry are alleged to have figured in the dashing career of this handsome Polish military man. Not being a native of Germany the captain kept his head, but was sentenced to life imprisonment pending possible exchange with a German spy prisoner of equal rank in Poland or France. Other high-born ladies and up in the plot received prison sentences. Germany under Hitler has furnished many horrors and surprises, but none surpassing in sheer barbarism the beheading of these two women for some idle chatter about some new gadget of war designed to kill more human beings than anything ever conceived before. Proves once again that there is no humanity in war, or in the making of war.

IMAGINATION MAY BE USED TO ADVANTAGE

Mind Can Be Made Unbounded Source of Pleasure

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D. Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright, 1934, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

What we picture in the mind's eye is always more alluring than what actually occurs. When we think of something we would like to do, the check-rein on our thoughts is loosened, and the images we conjure fit perfectly with our fondest fancies.

That is one of the advantages of using one's imagination. The mind can be made an unbounded source of pleasure. Yet the average individual uses his imagination too seldom!

The chief reason books and music and all forms of art stimulate the imagination. Comfortably seated in a chair, you drink it all in, and the mental pictures that take shape gratify the desire and unfulfilled wishes of your inner self.

Witness the quiet and soothing reactions when you hear a sweet melody, or the stirring of emotion at a crip, intense marching song.

In the realm of literature, fiction arouses mental images of quiet, peaceful moods and meadows, or a picture of the ocean with the waves surrounded by loved ones. In the other case you see the pomp and pride of soldiers, the shouts and farewells as the valiant, uniformed columns march by.

Your patriotism becomes definite and focused, and thoroughly adds to your joy the experience. But it is always the imagination that, as an intermediary between the sound heard or the thought read, is the source of pleasurable feeling - tone, gives value to the sensation.

It is the imagination that can be made a pleasure ground of thought. It makes you cheerful, rich and colorful. Draw on it for refreshment and joy. Remember stimulating your imagination by recalling scenes and experiences of the past.

Think of a pleasure trip, for instance. Close your eyes, relax and let the thoughts of the past come forth. Relive the scenes that thrilled and stimulated you. Work your imagination for all it is worth!

It takes practice, in a way, to stimulate your own imagination, but after a while the habit will become natural.

An excellent plan is to read a vivid, colorful and exciting story, then close the eyes and see how accurately you can rebuild the story in the mind, as compared to the impression it made upon the mind.

It also helps to look at a picture, a landscape in a magazine or a portrait, and then to see with how much detail it can be after-mind resurrected.

And to stimulate the imagination nothing is better than to read and create a story or a sketch. It may not be well expressed when first drawn. But what does that matter? In the last analysis it is the exercise of the imagination you are after.

TELLS OF MISSION LIFE IN FORMOSA

STIRLING—The regular meeting of St. Andrew's Young People's Guild was held in the Sunday School room on Monday evening at eight o'clock. The meeting was under the direction of the President, Mr. Johnston, who occupied the chair. After the singing of the opening hymn, all repeated the Lord's prayer. The Secretary, Miss Marguerite Rosebush, then read the minutes of the last meeting, which were adopted. A.er the roll was called which showed a very good attendance of regular members, as well as visitors, Mrs. Murduff and Miss Moffet then sang a very pleasing duet. Arthur Duncan read the Scripture lesson found in the ninth chapter of St. Luke, verses 23 to 26, and 52 to 63. Rev. J. A. Kotford then introduced the speaker of the evening, Miss M. Ramsay, who gave a splendid talk on her work in Formosa, from which place she recently returned.

Formosa, an island, comparatively small in size, measuring two hundred and fifty miles in length, and a hundred miles in width at its widest place, has a population of five million people, nearly half of the entire population of Canada. Three distinct races are apparent there, the Chinese and the Aborigines, and the governing element being Japanese. The oldest Christian mission established on the island is English Presbyterian in the south. And then the mission supported by the Presbyterian church in Canada, which is the oldest mission station of that denomination. The work completed thus far has resulted in christianizing about five thousand souls.

The work is carried on in three medical hospital schools, and by evangelistic campaigns, and though it may seem slow in process to the onlooker, it is steadfastly embedded, and there is an eagerness on the part of the natives that is truly gratifying to the workers. The starting of kindergartens has been a marvelous help, because so many older ones are reached through young lives.

Evangelistic work in the hospitals and schools, and throughout the country where churches have not yet been established is showing great results. Last year the missions' department established a leper colony, though its accommodation is for some eighty patients, it is not sufficiently advanced as yet to care for its full quota. This step is a great move toward the comfort of these poor outcasts. It is estimated that about three thousand lepers live on the island, and their condition is sadly neglected by other natives.

Those present felt a deep sense of gratitude toward Miss Ramsay for her splendid address. The meeting closed with the repeating of the Mizpah Benediction.

St. Paul's Young People's League held their regular meeting on Monday evening at eight o'clock in the church parlors. The opening exercises and devotional period was directed by the President, Mr. Harry Hulin. This consisted of a service of familiar hymns, and the Scripture lesson, which was read responsively. During the business part of the meeting the roll call was taken, showing a good attendance. The remaining portion of the program was in charge of Miss Mildred White. Mr. Reginald Matheson favored the gathering with a violin solo, Miss White then called on Mr. Harry Hulin to address the meeting.

Mr. Hulin chose for his theme "Religion". He clearly defined the word in his opening remarks, and then made a study of the various kinds of religion throughout the world. The topic was a timely one, and a great deal of study must have been required in the preparing of it. Bringing the word closer home in his closing remarks, Mr. Hulin stated that religion in the lives of our young people should not need advertising, but should radiate through their every activity.

Mr. Harry Lovabound gave a reading on the Lord's Prayer, after which a great deal of interest was shown in a slogan contest put on by Miss Smith. The meeting closed with the repeating of the Benediction.

A.Y.P.A

The members of St. John's A.Y.P.A. held a very enjoyable meeting on Monday evening, Feb. 18, which was in the form of a social evening. Then followed a dainty lunch, served by the ladies. The remainder of the evening was spent in dancing. The time went quickly, and as the guests were preparing for their departure, the President arose to express the appreciation of those present for the kind hospitality of the hosts who made this very successful evening possible. Rev. A. S. McConnell, in seconding the motion, added a few well chosen words to those of the President, Mr. Slower and Morrow.

GRADUATION GIFT

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

The girl with whom I have been keeping company is graduating from a nurses' training school. I wish you would please suggest a graduation gift that is both suitable and proper, and also not expensive. I am attached to her to a certain extent and although she may leave the city after graduation, I would like to give her a gift that shows my affection.

Would it be proper to send flowers at this occasion, even if it is to be a smaller affair than a college graduation, and I shall not be present? What kind of flowers and how many? When would it be the proper time to give her the gift, the day of the graduation, or when I meet her afterwards

Charles.

1. The most courtly and appropriate thing for a gentleman to send as a graduation present is a lovely corsage Since most girls are devoted to gardenias, and since they are "becoming" to all girls, this is a safe as well as a beautiful flower to choose for the corsage. If they are large gardenias, three grouped downward make a perfect corsage, and one easy and comfortable to wear. And warn the florist not to combine greenery with them—only their own glistening and beautiful leaves. Also not too much ribbon and no tinseled ribbon.

2. Send the corsage so that it will arrive in plenty of time for her to wear it at the graduation exercises, if she wishes. If you wish also to send another gift to her, it might be a beautifully-bound book or some exquisitely monogrammed evening handkerchiefs, or a fountain pen and pencil set....something like that.

MOURNING

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

There is a friend of ours who lost her parent. This friend is about thirty years of age. A. thinks she should wear her veil six months down over her face, and then wear it thrown back for six months. B. thinks three months is enough to wear a veil over the face.

Readers.

So thoroughly indefinite have become the customs of the wearing of mourning that nowadays each one is left to his or her own decision about what to wear and how long to wear it. All "regulations" for mourning have long since been abandoned, and instead of definite rules we have left only our personal choice in the matter.

About two years ago there seemed to be only one definite rule left....that the closest relatives of the deceased wore veils to the funeral. Now even this suggestion has practically been given up. However, again this should be reasonably abided by, and it there is any comfort or convenience to us in wearing a veil, we should wear one.

The same fundamental common sense and reasonableness apply as the answers to all the questions concerning wearing mourning. One seldom sees now the heavy-hearted mourning veils, either plain or crepe-bordered, but there is no reason why we shouldn't wear one if we wish. And we should wear it or any other detail of mourning for as long or as short a time as it gives any comfort to our spirit. It is what is in our heart and what we feel in our spirits that counts. It is what we wish to do.

CANNIFTON

The regular meeting of the Cannifton Women's Missionary Society was held on Thursday, Feb. 7th, at the home of Mrs. Wm. I Cole.

The meeting was called to order by the President, Mrs. H. Tweedy. Quiet music was rendered by the pianist, followed by prayer. Hymn 388 was sung. The Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. E. S. Gilbert, after which Mrs. Whitfield and Rev. Merrick led in prayer.

Mrs. A. H. Maguire, a former member of the society, gave the devotional leaflet. Hymn 496 was sung.

The business part of the meeting was conducted by the president.

It was moved by Mrs. Gilbert and seconded by Mrs. Clapp that Mrs. R. Empson be assistant press reporter.

It was moved by Mrs. Gilbert and seconded by Mrs. Chambers, that Mrs. (Rev.) Merrick be sent as delegate to Picton.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted

The treasurer's report was given by Mrs. H. Empson.

Mrs. Harold Bird took charge of the program, which opened with Hymn 362.

A temperance reading entitled "A Message from Saskatchewan" was given by Mrs. S. Bird.

A pamphlet on "Systematic Giving" was read by Mrs. Gilbert.

Mrs. Callery gave a very interesting talk on "The Life of William Carrie."

Reading by Mrs. H. Bird.

Mrs. Loucks read an account of the Prince of Wales' visit to India, which was enjoyed by all.

A reading, "India and Her People," was given by Mrs. C. Mills.

The meeting closed with hymn 356, followed by prayer.

At the close of the meeting a delicious lunch was served by the hostess, including a large birthday cake, in remembrance of a number of the members whose birthdays are in February. A very delightful social half-hour was spent and enjoyed by everyone.

A vote of thanks was tendered the hostess for her kind hospitality.

When Household Tasks Mar The Beauty of Your Hands

(The Beauty Box)

Helen Twelvetrees

This famous screen beauty knows that only painstaking care will preserve the loveliness of her hands.

By HELEN FOLLETT

Don't let your hands get old looking, quester for beauty. If you do you'll not only look scrubby, but feel scrubby. Tucking hands out of sight simply can't be done, certainly not at the bridge table.

Despite all the marvelous domestic gadgets that help to make housework simpler and easier, there are jobs that little mitts must do. Protect them as much as you can. Contact with dirt takes its toll. In time even creams, lotions and bleaches won't help, creases will appear.

Be faithful to the dish mop and rubber gloves, Select a high grade soap for kitchen work. Don't overlook the cleansing and softening benefits of corn meal and soap suds mixed together. The meal grinds grime out of knuckle creases. Keep a hand lotion in the kitchen, use it after the dishes are finished. For the grand social occasion give the hands a brisk massage with vanishing cream.

Much has been written about an offensive breath, but not enough. It often is a symptom of infected tonsils or teeth that need attention. A sluggish digestive system is another cause.

If ordinary mouth rinses do not bring about a change for the better trot-trot to the office of the old family doc. Have him look you over. This trouble is a handicap in business and social life, and should not be tolerated.

A good neck bleach is made by adding the juice of half a lemon to half a cup of buttermilk. Bathe the skin surface, dry well, apply the lemonated buttermilk with a velvet sponge or a bit of cotton, let it dry on.

Let us urge the home gal to wear properly fitted shoes when going through the daily domestic routine. The shoe should come fairly high on the foot to offer support. The heel should be wide and of medium height, tapped with rubber.

Quack beauty doctors have been pretty well eliminated. Plastic surgery and the face lift have become respectable. Facial deformities are now treated by surgeons of good standing. The charge for such operations is high, but, considering that defects undermine morale and interfere with business and social success the investment brings full returns.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

MAN-BAITING GIRLS TOO OFTEN DRIVE LOVE AWAY

Are you the sort of girl who, in matters of the affections, is never content to let well enough alone?

Do you like to tease and prick and prod the youths who are in love with you (even, in fact, the particular youth whose love you secretly return) so that the poor creatures are in a chronic state of totally undeserved misery?

If so, I warn you to mend your ways lest some day, to your amazement, you find yourself stranded in a desert of lovelessness, your admirers having found gentler treatment elsewhere.

Mary B., aged 20, is a case in point. Let me tell her story.

"About a year and a half ago," she writes, "I saw a great deal of a boy I will call John. He was very hard hit and wanted to marry me immediately. I am willing to marry, but only when I get good and ready."

"Meanwhile there were half a dozen other boys who helped to make life exciting, so I sort of played a game with all of them, including poor John. I knew he didn't like all this, but I didn't know that all of a sudden he would drop out of the picture, as he did.

"Well, a month ago I got lonely and sent for John. He came. I told him I was sorry for my foolishness, and suggested we get married. Can you believe it He refused! I know he is still in love with me—but he seems to be afraid.

"After this humiliation, what shall I do? Resign myself to being an old maid? The worst of it is, I believe I'm honestly in love with that brute of a John."

Countless girls, intoxicated, I suppose, by their own power to charm, have conducted themselves in just this way toward the good sound, steady, big hearted men who are so often fated to fall in love with flirts. Such men will accept a good deal of hard treatment. But there comes a point when they rebel, so that in the end it is often the girls themselves, the charming and cruel young men-baiters, who lose out.

True happiness is achieved in a very different way, as Mary may be beginning to suspect. It is a bitter lesson when the man who has been your devoted lover, and whom you yourself at last are willing to trust your life to, decides you are too frivolous to marry and forsakes you.

It may be, of course, that John, in his slow, patient, long-suffering way, is trying to teach Mary that he is a serious human being and not a casual toy. Perhaps he believes he can shape her into the sort of woman a man ought to marry. Who knows

Mary's only course, as I have told her, is to swallow her pill, accept John on the basis of friendship and try to prove to him, sincerely and thoroughly, that she is a changed girl. If, as she believes, he still loves her, his resistance will eventually break down and the story may end happily, after all.

Still with us is that most popular alliance of beige, light yellow and brown. A smart coat is in yellowish beige homespun and is made in double-breasted style. Collar and notched revers are of fine beaver and there are dark brown buttons.

Gone into seclusion from the outside world are the toes when it comes to evening sandals. The nicest sandals have toe-tips. One pretty model is a T-strap affair in silver or gold kid with narrow gold and silver plaited straps.

The sun spots lots of charming knitted costumes down South this year. A useful afternoon frock is in turquoise blue with a plain knit skirt and a top that has a lacy hand-crocheted yoke, cape sleeves and corded neckline draw-strings that tie in back.

Marks in the sands are made by smart printed linen shoes this year. Many of the models are in the authentic tartan plaids, while others have brilliant flying fish or marine flora printed on coarse linen. Many of the sandals have square heels.

Get a ticket and go away wearing a grand ensemble designed for travel purposes. The loose, comfy coat is in bold checks of wine-red and white worn over a simple but perfectly cut dress in wine red.

Under the moon down South lots of surah silk is being worn for evening. A charming dress, with a very, very wide skirt, is in bold black and white checked surah. The jacket has narrow collar and revers of white pique.

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL
"Girl of My Dreams"
A Sparkling and Tuneful Romance of College Youth

Catchy tunes, snappy dialogue, pretty co-eds and a track meet that spells the last word in thrilling climaxes, combine to make "Girl Of My Dreams," which opens tomorrow at the Capitol Theatre, the screen musical event of the present season.

An air of infectious gayety pervades the picture throughout and keeps the audience chuckling with good humor. This Monogram company romance is alive with youth, high spirits, and fairly exudes the enthusiasm of the present day college man and co-ed for dear old alma mater.

The story centering around Gwen, Prince Hawley belle, is really very plausible and allows a satisfactory basis for the many musical and comedy features.

Gwen serves as the pivot for the plot and with Jack Ellis' aggressiveness towards Don Cooper, retiring and serious minded athlete, shows she is really in love with Larry Haynes, conceited hurdler of the track team, supplies the action. When Don succumbs to the charms of Orpen, he does it completely while Larry stands by to watch the grief of his dreams walk out of his life. The rise and fall of fast emotions afford effective bits of melodrama. With the big meet, Gwen realizes that she is the cause of the team's downfall and straightens everything out in time to bring the picture to a happy finale.

"The Peacock Feather"

A large group of noted stage and screen stars, numbering in all, enact the story of "The Peacock Feather," the second feature attraction on this excellent double bill.

A story of the sensational kidnapping of the President of the United States in the film features, Arthur Byron as the President, and Edward Arnold, Peggy Conklin, Edward Ellis, Paul Kelly, Osgood Perkins, Sydney Blackmer, Leland Beckus, Gertrude Dervye, Charles Grapewin and Robert Mc-Wade.

The film is a vigorous indictment of profiteers and crooked politicians. Proof of the power of the United States is beloved by everyone for bringing prosperity to the country. When a threat of internal war brings the shadow on this country, he fights to keep the people out of war.

With a group of war profiteers plot against him and by newspapers swing the opinion against the President, they succeed in kidnapping him and by means of a "Peacock Feather" replaces the "We Want War" slogan.

How the mystery is eventually solved and how the problem cleared up, brings the film to a thrilling and dramatic finale.

Fox Movietone Events will be shown preceding the feature presentations. Last complete show 8.45.

Last Times Tonight

"Wednesday's Child," the intensely human story of a child's heartbreak, starring Edward Arnold, Karen Morley and Frankie Thomas.

AT THE BELLE
"Wings in the Dark"
Myrna Loy and Cary Grant in Stirring Air Thriller

No matter whether you're interested in aviation or not—whether you can tell a plane's type by the noise it makes in the air or whether you're unable to tell an airacobra from a wing-ding, it's a stirring, dramatic treat and an hour of thrills, chills and grand romance in "Wings in the Dark" awaiting you. The picture starring Myrna Loy and Cary Grant, comes to the Belle Tuesday (Thursday) and Friday, matinee and evening.

Although the plot of "Wings in the Dark" is based on an aviator's unwavering work for safety in the air through perfection of "blind flying", the picture is so replete with drama, suspense, heart-tugging romance and novel and original slants that it sweeps you right along on a wave of enthusiasm for its sheer entertainment value.

Its hero is Cary Grant, who distrusts lovely Myrna Loy because he believes that her spectacular, publicity hunting flights bring disrepute on his beloved profession. When as a result of an accident she ere of a flight that will climax his experiments, he is blinded, Miss Loy comes to his aid.

Soul sick and desperate, he flies to the woods. Miss Loy follows, bringing him one of those grand Seeing Eye dogs (about which you've heard a lot in Alexander Woolcott's broadcasts). Between the love and the dog's devotion they work a miracle and Grant resolves to return to his work.

But the experiments cost money, and Myrna Loy essays more and more desperate flights to get the money for him. Then his plane and instruments are taken from him because of lack of funds.

Finally Miss Loy undertakes to do an extremely hazardous flight. As she approaches her goal, fog settles down over the field. Trapped in the clouds with her gas rapidly dwindling, she faces death or injury until Grant is galvanized into action.

In the stirring and original final scenes of the picture, Grant rescues Miss Loy, proves the value of his experimental work and best of all, regains his sight—so that he can again see the joy of flying.

Among the highspots of the film are the touching and beautiful love scenes between the boy growing in the dar- and the girl whose heart is filled with love and pity for him. If they don't bring a lump into your throat, we suggest that you consult a psychologist.

James Flood, the man who discovered Myrna Loy, and Cary Grant and his famed orchestra in a diverting revue, a delightful British Miniature Travelfilm entitled "York", and "Inconsidered Cargo" a clever and amusing novelette.

Fredric March and lovely Anna Sten in "We Live Again" and the romantic collegiate comedy "The Band Plays On" featuring Stuart Erwin and Robert Young, will be presented tonight.

WOMEN ARE ASKED

MONTREAL, Feb. 20 — (CP)— An appeal to all thoughtful women to support and defend the workers of their own sex was made by Mrs. Dunnell La Violette, president of the International des Femmes Conservatrices, in an address on women's rights.

Regarding women of the right to be employed would be unjust to men as well as to women, she said. In many families the "head of the house" could not earn enough to provide the necessities of life and his wages must be supplemented by those of his wife or daughter. The speaker strongly advocated equal pay for equal work.

British Arms Inquiry Will Supply Needed Data, Says Sen. Nye

By FREDERICK HOTSON
Central Press Canadian Staff Writer

"The lid is off. But we cannot hope to accomplish much more than the release, during the early months of 1935, of the destructive but powerful senator from North Dakota, uttered these words to this writer in Toronto, on the course of a confidential survey of the accomplishments, after three weeks' sittings, of the United States senatorial committee's investigation of the munitions industry, which he originated and over which he presided.

"We can go far," he said at that time, "in uncovering the ramifications of the powerful armament groups and their close but destructive alliance with our government agencies. But we can hardly hope in the course of only a few months, the control of the destinies of practically the entire world to the munitions questions.

Take Profits Out of War

Senator Nye and other advocates of government manufacture or control of munitions believe that the expense of the arms traffic by two important nations like the United States and Great Britain will lead eventually to a strict regulation or abolition of the holocaust of 1914-18. They are definitely of the opinion that those who trade in arms have little or no regard for world peace; consequently, that to take the huge profits out of war is to reduce the incentive for war.

The announcement of a royal commission to study this question in England has come, after three months of consideration and debate. Early last November Sir John Simon, British Foreign Secretary, minimized the activities of the Nye inquiry in Washington and declared that Britain would not tolerate a similar investigation.

Shareholders Besieged

Nearly a month later, Sir John apologized for his attitude and declared that a government inquiry

Isama, Rachel Crowdy

to implement many worthwhile changes in the munitions until the British becomes equally "munitions-conscious" and undertakes to set her house in order as well."

Two months later Senator Nye's committee had completed the second phase of its investigation into the arms traffic, and had revealed some astounding evidence of graft, corruption and connivance between munitions manufacturers and government officials.

Sir Philip Gibbs

At that time I asked Mr. Nye, in Washington, whether he was satisfied with the progress of the committee, and what concrete achievements he hoped to secure.

Forcesee British Inquiry

"Much has been done already," he replied, "but there is much more to be achieved. Next week I shall ask President Roosevelt to appropriate another $50,000 to the committee, so that we may carry the inquiry to a successful conclusion. I think we shall get the most sensational part of the story of the munitions industry, which has originated and ever

FINANCIAL AID IS MENTIONED

"Five thousand dollars at this time would loom up far more than at any other period later on. You may possibly have thought of this before," continued the letter. "We have talked this over with Aurelia and she believes I should write you and make this. By the way, Aurelia is a well-balanced girl, smart in her ways and thrifty out of it.

"The writer referred to the personal traits of indeed finger nails, 'necking', drinking and late hours. "But, thank goodness, she has her feet on the ground. Aurelia's sense of value is very good. That is common along with well, is an average scholar in his studies and is fond of many games, handball, and other recreations." The letter was signed H. W. Vermilyea.

Letter to Clarence

A second letter, April 17, 1934, written to Clarence, informed him that a suggestion was being made Mrs. Vermilyea was living on the money owned by their mother be divided equally among the four children.

"I am writing Arthur telling him the same thing," said the writer. In the message it was pointed out that the request for division of the money had been prompted by depression in business and "because the fact that 'the children should receive all the education they could." The writer further stated that Mrs. Vermilyea urged that money because she could possibly need during the remainder of her life. "Everyone is thinking they should provide sufficiently for her," it was pointed out.

Reference to Children

Yet another letter, purporting to be signed by Vermilyea, and received by Mrs. Vermilyea, dwelt at length on the affairs of Aurelia Vermilyea, in which also was the temptations of present day conditions for girls were pointed out.

Than Vermilyea was expected to donate to "Aurelia's living money each month." A guinea pig entered by Vermilyea in a show in a school fair, said the writer.

Vermilyea's health was pointed out, had not improved since the last letter he was written. Real estate in partnership with Arthur was also a source of worry. "In many cases equities had been wiped out and I am obliged to rent."

However, things brighten up I will be forced to lose these lots, to tide me over for living expenses," continued the writer. "I am writing this up to my mother to use her better judgment in this matter. "Things were never like this in Calgary before."

"I must close, hoping that you are all well and prospering. Yours very truly, H. W. Vermilyea."

A letter of June 16, 1934, was identified by Mrs. Vermilyea and sent to "my dear mother" (Mrs. Vermilyea). The writer requested a further account of depressed business conditions in California.

Letter of June 16, 1934

My dear Mother:—

Received your letter of the 6th inst. Before writing you a few weeks ago I had a talk with the chaplain here. He is an American, a fellow off and his father of children I stated my case to him and asked him if he would consider it an importance if I were to take up the problem with you. He said he would like help his children, under the same circumstances, did not feel free to discuss it with you. That was so much from an American point of view.

"I then talked with a Canadian who has been treasurer of the city of Calgary for years. He is also well off and mature. He and his wife have been friends of ours and the same problem with their children. He said he'd put what they did. They said with world conditions as they are, England would be in a position to pay debts for the first time in history, and that no other country except as France and Italy, with many billions owing to their own government, as the attached article confirms, many burning their billions to obtain currency and hundreds of others committing suicide, it is not surprising that anyone in agriculture or depending entirely upon agriculture, should be badly off.

Should Parent's Vivecide

"Then I talked with another Canadian, a parent, and head of our Public Utilities business. He said the same thing, that it would be very improper under the circumstances described, that I talk it over with you very frankly, but that I should advise others who are interested what I was writing, so as not to leave a wrong impression. He said he thought you would appreciate the position I did not confer with old maids or old bachelors or people without parents. I wanted to get a parent's point of view.

"I've told you a story once that I have never told before. There was a young fellow in your neighborhood who forged a man's name on a cheque or note and landed up in the penitentiary. Another neighbor said that he would never send his son to school to learn to read and write, so that he knew he could never forge anyone's name. You can laugh at the ridiculousness of such philosophy. It would be just as ridiculous to contribute to their return to the simon-pure ranks. Far from the rush of the National Exchange they tell each other stories of the big-time.

MAKING THE GRADE

Metal Bedstead As Loud Speaker

Erin, Ont., Feb. 20 (CP)—To strains of mysterious music from some undiscovered source, Elmer Townline, awakens each morning. There is no radio or phonograph in his house. There is, however, a home-made metal bedstead which may be serving as soundbox and picking up radio music. The bedstead, a heavy metal affair, is long as three hours.

Farmer Groves' free concerts put him in a class with farmer Ben Robert of Rockwood, Alberta, who has a well from whose dark depths there rise mystic hi-de-hos and ring out songs on social reforms and the gold situation; and also with the farmer near Orangeville, who has a store from whose interior come muffled wailings of clarinets and tenor dialogue of radio mystery dramas.

All experts say, are the result of ether waves from radio stations, gone astray, picked up by unintentional antennae in some way and relayed to natural resonators.

Groves, who lives with his wife and two children, says the company got busy, hoaxed telephone lines that carried radio programs; and even an articulate soprano solo tap, that could serve as a quartet at times.

Depression is Not Due to War But to Weakness in Capital System, Says Economist in Banking Study

Study of the Central Bank of Canada, the newest creation in Canada, was in the hands of Prof. J. A. Knox, of the Department of Economics, who spoke before the fifth meeting of the Chamber of Commerce series of addresses on Better Citizenship last evening in the Y.M.C.A., was as interesting as narrative. Bankers of Belleville and many others heard the comments of the financier on the creation.

Prof. Knox talked the language of the street in his address. Banking he said had two aspects, the practical side, which is exemplified in the local branches, as making loans on good security, a branch which requires acumen of the very highest sort, and the social significance of the activities of banking, which is the aspect not so well known.

Crusoe the Simplest Form

He brought in Robinson Crusoe as representative of the economical man. Crusoe's annual saving came, one man getting his living from nature, which is complicated enough but "when his man Friday comes on the scene the problem is greatly complicated." Prof. Knox pointed out that in a complicated society groups have grown up for the purpose of satisfying all the wants of the various groups.

"Under an all-wise dictator and if all men were willing to submit, the highest degree of production at that the utmost productivity out of labor possible would be achieved.

'Will Not Be Slaves'

"A great deal of the trouble of the capitalistic system of today is that we will not be slaves. We will not deprive ourselves of our liberties," continued the economist. "So we have built up a system, which many think is leading to disaster. Economists believe that when private profit is allowed to be made by certain classes and they get this at the expense of all others.

But this is not proven, he said, as in the nineteenth century when private profit was not restricted as it is today, the world never witnessed such a growth in population and improvement in the standard of living of the masses.

"Before you do away with the private profit system, and destroy the facilities for private profit, look very carefully at the alternative," Dr. Knox warned.

Money and prices and their proper behavior are essential to the proper operation of the capitalistic system. When prices rise it should mean that goods are scarcer, that there are less to sell. Fall in prices should indicate a greater quantity.

"The final job in our society is to prevent the worldwide fluctuation of prices such as we have seen for the past thirty years.

War Not to Blame

"I do not believe the present depression is properly due to the war at all, but I believe it is due to inherent weakness in the capital system itself. And this we will have to overcome and depressions as we have had.

"I do not see any permanent benefit of printing more money. It can have but a slight influence in the long run.

"What is the cause of instability? I am afraid, I must blame the banks. The banks in doing what they are doing, do what cause the instability in the country. I think of it as a kind of a pump in circulation in the community. I think of course the banker is subject to unkind criticism, unjustly, the real cause being the methods of banking.

Mr. Knox showed how with additional deposits, as when a man finds a million dollar gold nugget, only 10 per cent of the million is left in his credit in the bank. That bank would lend it out to the amount of eighty percent, or more, and it would come back again in a short time as it was expended and again and again this process would go on until the deposits or credit caused by million dollars would appear eight millions or more. That million dollars goes on until all the money is found in the bank reserve and the bank deposits grow far beyond the needs.

Deposits of Wealth

"The idea that banks create money is all wrong. They do not lend money and take deposits. Deposits today in the banks slightly exceed two billions are reported, yet the actual wealth is only between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000. The difference between this and the two billions is explained by lending and depositing and lending There is nothing mysterious or erudite about it.

"As a matter of fact we do not need money, all you need is credit and the belief you have it.

"It is this business of blowing up through lending and re-lending which is the serious social aspect of the system. Such does not occur in any other business.

"Now what are we to do about it? Suppose we set out with the idea of keeping prices levels. That would require altering the amount of money supply. The government could order the banks to become deposit vaults and stop lending to the service and prevent them from lending. Then business expanding money would have to be met it by floating bonds. Actually this suggestion is the practice of the government, but this would introduce the evil of rigidity. It is even possible to make the bank a job machine.

Central Bank Not a Bank

The Bank of Canada is not a bank. It is a commission appointed by the government, to perform a social function. It is not an institution. It is there to do service increasing or decreasing the volume of money in the hands of the people.

"It is not to compete with or do any thought that you can cure all the ills of society by this method.

"The governor of the bank will no doubt be training his directors in the monetary course for years. In reality probably the governor, the deputy governor and the technical staff will run the bank. If so not think the directors will be there to do with the conduct of the Bank of Canada." Mr. Knox praised the work of Mr. Towers.

The Bank of Canada is "set up" on a basis that is entirely free of financial set-up. The banks will have to turn over the gold they have at $20.67 per ounce, not at the new price of $35. It will be a bank by bankers only. If a bank wants to get more money it will go to the Bank of Canada and deposit the individual borrowers' deed when he asks credit at a bank branch.

Covering these points

"How is the Bank of Canada to force money on the banks?" he asked. That means, how is it possible for it to make the banks borrow money? The answer is that it is safe to expand credit. It can buy bills in the commercial banks cash and then the banks will be forced to ease up. There is not much danger of the banks increasing money but rather it is more likely to reduce money in circulation. It is silly to believe the rate of interest can be lowered by the bank of Canada. The main work of this Bank is not to prevent depressions but to moderate the extent of the boom so that the depth of the depression may not be so marked.

The Bank of Canada can run up the rate of discount on the banks and so prevent expansion of credit. In order to absorb a million of real wealth in the banks the Bank of Canada can go to a large corporation, make it a fine offer of a loan, receive this corporation's cheque on a commercial bank, and automatically the credit of the munion disappears from the commercial bank's deposits. Restriction of that credit is effective at once and all banks and borrowers feel the effect. In a short time instead of the one million of reduced deposit the total of deposits has been destroyed. The banks restrict that amount of credit.

Messrs. Robert Tannahill, J. B. Bowen, and T. O. Hordy asked questions. Mr. E. V. Illey who was chairman, spoke of the part banks play in the life and character of the Bank of Canada. Mr. W. A. Mackenzie moved a vote of thanks to the professor.

THIS SCHEME HAS BEEN PROPOSED FOR CANADA

Palo Duro, canyon, Texas. (Note the growth of cottonwood and cedar which thrives under almost any condition.)

Gathering seed for experimentation

Of great interest to Canada is the new tree "shelterbelt" being planted right across the United States from the Canadian border to Texas. The belt region will be 100 miles wide and will be as straight as it can possibly be made. The underlying idea is to provide a source of moisture to prevent the terrible drought such as was experienced in 1934. A scheme similar to this has been proposed for Canada by the department of agriculture. It is hoped for the U. S. plan that a forest will be built up stretching right across the country. Above layout shows scenes from various districts of the work in progress.

ITALO—ABYSSINIAN SITUATION REMAINS IN SUSPENSE

As the Italian-Ethiopian discord continues in the hands of the diplomats, conditions on the Italian-Abyssinian frontier continue quiet, with the soldiers of Mussolini and those of Emperor Haile Selassi alertly watching each other. This snap shows Italian troops, and an Italian fort near Afdub, where the pitched battle between Ethiopian and Italian soldiers, last January 29th precipitated the acute diplomatic situation that now prevails. Rome, and that is to say Mussolini, wants apologies from Abyssinia; indemnity for his dead, and a military tribute to the Italian flag. Emperor Haile Selassi, through his diplomatic representatives, scoffs at the apologies and counters with demand for indemnity, as the injured party in the dispute, and intimates that if he must fight, he has 1,000,000 men-at-arms to handle the situation for him. The world is hoping, meanwhile that the diplomats will be able to clear up the dangerous situation.

His ski costume, liberally smeared with snow, testifies to the prince's inexperience on the runners, this being his first ski jaunt in several years. The Prince's vacation here has worked a miracle of prosperity for this winter resort. Prices have gone up, to the extent of profiteering, and the government threatens to take stern measures.

Leafs Subdue Maroons 3-1 In Roughest Game of Season And Increase Lead to 10 Points

Horner Takes on All And Sundry in Checking Duel

RANGERS WIN

Hold Lead in American Section by Downing Eagles

(By A. E. Fulford, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

Reginald Horner, the home-loving young Torontonian, who is paired with King Clancy on Leaf's defence, believes hockey games can be won by knocking down puck-carriers hard and often as they sail in for a shot at the nets.

Horner's ideas along this line have brought him the tag of hockey's bad man—he is really a mild young chap off the ice—frequent rests beside the penalty timekeeper and not a few fistic encounters with puckcarriers, who don't like being bounced to the ice.

It was that way at Montreal last night, when the big red-head picked up two fist fights and 19 minutes in penalties, more than half the 37 minutes imposed during the game with Maroons and enough to bring his season's stay in the box to only eight minutes short of two solid hours.

Despite Horner's long absences from the ice Toronto won 3-1, getting a goal in each period of the boisterous game, witnessed by a sell-out crowd of 12,000 and holding Tommy Gorman's team scoreless in all but the second.

Ten Point Lead

It all added up to a discouraging evening for Maroons who had hoped to draw closer to Leafs, leaders in the National League's International Division, but instead saw Conny Smythe's team lengthen their lead to 10 points. It practically wiped out whatever chance Maroons had to catch Leafs. The latter have only eight games to play and five of them are at home.

When New York Rangers defeated St. Louis Eagles 2-1 at Madison Square Garden it made the meeting of Leafs and Rangers for the N.H.L. title more probable. Lester Patrick's great comeback outfit held their two-point lead in the American Division over Boston Bruins, who came from behind to beat Montreal Canadiens 3-1 at Boston.

The trouble started at Montreal, when Horner boarded Herbie Cain. He was on his way to the penalty box, when Stew Evans attacked him and after the fist fight had been quelled Horner and Marvin Wentworth, who was confused with Evans by the officials, each got majors.

That made seven minutes for the Torontonian and he added 10 to it later in the period, when he tangled with Baldy Northcott and they were both handed majors, Horner's time being doubled under a league rule. The 17 minutes in one period was believed to be a record and he added to it in the third with a major.

Two Players Injured

Besides the fights the game saw two players injured, Evans in the third period when he crashed into Horner and cut a leg muscle and Andy Blair of Toronto, in the second when he suffered a bruised back.

Hec Kilrea got the Leaf's first period goal with Clancy assisting. Buzz Boll got the second period counter working with Pep Kelly and Frankie Finnigan polished off the Leaf performance with a solo goal in the final minute of the game.

Canadiens played aggressively at Boston and Wilf Cude gave a standout performance in the Habitant goal. But even at that, and with Bruins missing on a dozen or more plays that looked like producing goals, the Bostonians had enough advantage to win.

Aurel Joliat, veteran Canadien left wing, gave them a lead in the first period, that held until more than half way through the second when Dit Clapper scored on a play made by Marty Barry. Nels Stewart put Bruins ahead in the third and Jack Portland made it sure a few minutes later.

Penalties to the Eagles won Rangers their victory at New York after the St. Louis team had thrown a scare into Lester Patrick's outfit. Joe Lamb scored half way through the first period and Eagles held the advantage until the same time in the third, when Rangers got a break through a penalty to Glen Brydson.

Working with Bun Cook and Frank Boucher, iron man Murray Murdock got the tieing goal and a few minutes later, when Frank Jerwa was on the penalty bench Bill Cook flipped in the winning counter.

NAPANEE JRS. GET BIG LEAD

Defeat Tweed Kids 11-3 And Were Easily the Best

Napanee Feb. 20.—Making every period a winning one Napanee Gibbard Bees gave a display of speed and close checking that made them favorites for the group title as they outplayed Tweed the group leaders, 11 to 3 here Tuesday night in the first game of the final series for the championship of the Hastings-Lennox O.H.A. junior "B" group before a capacity crowd that included a large delegation from the northern town. The return game will be played in Tweed on Thursday night, and the winner will meet Kingston Frontenacs in the first round of the playdowns. Carrying an eight-goal lead into the final game, the locals appear good enough to emerge title-holders in their first year in O.H.A. hockey.

Gibbards jumped into the lead three minutes after the face-off as W. Jackson scored. They pressed Tweed hard and dominated the play, but were unable to beat Reeves again till 12 minutes later, when Tompkins went all the way through easily beating the visitors' goaler after drawing him to one side. Tweed then threw four men on the attack and, led by their starry Tummon, they swarmed Gibbards' goal, but were unable to beat Curry. Murphy got his third penalty of the period 30 seconds before the gong as he boarded Cournyea.

The locals were a man short starting the second session and H. Leal was right through for shot as C. Jackson tripped him and Referee Holway waved him off. With a two-man advantage Tweed were unable to notch a counter as W. Jackson and Tompkins rose to great heights with their puck ragging and held the fort till their mates returned. Tweed continued to press sending three-men waves up the ice only to be skated off at the defence or find Curry a stumbling block.

H. Leal and McGuire finally poked a way and with only one defence player to beat the latter gave the big defence man a perfect pass on which he made no mistake at the half-way mark. Five minutes later Leary put Gibbards two up after the locals had forced Tweed to yield to a furious late-period assault that saw Richardson, Tompkins and Gerow score in the last five minutes to give the Napanee kids a six to one lead at the end of the second period.

The visitors were unable to halt the fast-skating Gibbards, who came back with a five-goal splurge in the last session as Ellsbury and McGuire were able to add to Tweed's solitary marker.

Tummon and McGuire skated themselves into exhaustion as they led rush for Tweed and were most prominent for the visitors. W. Jackson and Tompkins, the latter with four goals, were outstanding on the locals' attack while Curry in goal repeatedly saved sensationally. Twelve penalties were handed out by Referee "Bouncer" Holway, five in the first two period. The teams:—

Referee—Bouncer Holway, Belleville.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

After a lapse of over two weeks the city league pucksters are back with us again, this time with a vengeance because their semi-final play-offs commence Thursday eve. at the Arena and brings together the league leading Alemites versus the rejuvenated S.E.A.C. kids, the second placed Grills' Garage clash with the sturdy Trenton team. At the end of the regular playing schedule in the loop, it was found, that Grills' and Alemite were tied for first place and the question arose, which team will meet Trenton in the semi-finals and which team shall play S.E.A.C. Now it is no secret, that neither of these clubs desired any part of Jim Day's Trenton aggregation, especially in the semi-finals. Eventually President Rollins decided to toss a coin to decide which club should be awarded the coveted first place position and the right to meet South End, Stan Hagerman's Alemites getting the "break". But now the question arises, did the Alemites get the break or not, as we understand that the S.E.A.C. have signed Pete Morgan, "Stewie" McElrath and Murney Green to their roster. As a matter of fact all of the teams have been materially strengthened, all of which is gladly noted by John Fan.

Checking back on the season's statistics of goals for and against in the city league we find that Trenton, having played six games, led the pack with 25 goals in their favor while the Alemite, in five games only had eight goals scored against them. The scoring qualities of the various clubs in the city league are, but first it must be noted that Grills, Alemite, Aajmaa Club and 20th Century only played five of their scheduled six games:

	G.	F.	A
Trenton	6	25	14
Grills A. C.	5	23	14
Alemite	5	20	8
United Cigars	6	19	14
S. E. A. C.	6	15	14
20th Century	5	11	28
Aajmaa Club	5	11	33

"Unless there is a hitch in the arrangements, we'll be presenting the Golden Gloves boving tournament in Belleville early in March," was Promoter Clem Allen's reply to a question relating to that subject today. "Of course we have to send out application blanks and suchlike before we can find out how many outside boxers are coming and also how many classes are needed", continued Matchmaker Allen. The acquisition of the Provincial Golden Glove boxing tournament for Belleville is one of the biggest achievements ever realized in local fight circles and much credit is due Clem Allen and his Stewart Warner-Alemite A. C. Incidently the sectional winners declared in Belleville will subsequently journey to Toronto to compete in the provincial finals in April.

"An orchid for George Campbell, sports editor of the Oshawa Times". Sometime ago the "Hockey Merry-go-round" column published in the Toronto Daily Star, gave the Oshawa junior O.H.A. club the well-known raspberry over a player, who had been suspended and generally gave the Oshawa team the "Bronx cheer". Campbell, under his own name, replied to the acquisition of the Star sport scribe and dared Lou Marsh's employee to answer his questions or even so much as publish the Oshawa angle. The reply received by Campbell in the Star "Merry-go-round" column on Saturday read——"That will be all for today. There is no answer. George; you will have to pick an argument with somebody else"... Looks as though George only won the argument, but backed the "Hog Town" scribe up and made him swallow his own statements. "Congratulations, Georgie, old boy."

We understand that the local intermediate hockey team got the sweetest going over in Peterboro, that one team ever took and were forced to like it. Referee Bert McCaffery let the Petes give the Thomasites butt ends, knees, elbows and what have you and then capped off the situation by disallowing a Belleville goal, that he could not have helped but seen, as he was standing directly in front of the play. Barney York was on the receiving end of a nasty jab, that rendered him hors de combat, while the rough usage meted out to Roy Covert was most uncalled for, the players state. Covert, it is understood, gave the home town fans a demonstration of "how to take it", smiling. We wouldn't trade Covert for a dozen like Calladine, especially when playing on the road, when the going is tough. As a matter of fact Cy Barriage out-played the flashy Peterboro centre on numerous occasions. It must be remembered, that in Belleville, Calladine only scored one goal in two games.

Sam Curry's Tweed kids ran into an abrupt stumbling block last night when the Napanee juniors took 'em to town in the local junior group finals by the score of 11 to 3, giving Walter Gerow's kids an eight goal lead to journey to Tweed with. After defeating the Napanee kids twice in succession in the regular group schedule, it must have been a bitter pill for Marse Curry to swallow. Incidently we understand that he Tompkins-Jackson-brothers line was far too speedy and completely out-played the Tweed youth. Bouncer Holway, local bell ringer gave excellent satisfaction as the extra man on the ice. (Peterboro papers please copy last sentence.)

In reference to the Belleville at Peterboro intermediate struggle on Monday night the Liftlock City sport jotter-down says:

"Give Belleville credit, they never quit trying. Behind five goals early in the first period, they toiled away in an uphill embroglio and made it a fight before all the polls were in. This kid Covert is a nice hockey played. Ethier also locked good, and Powers. And Goalie Jeffrey—who will likely retire now to South America to raise rubber, instead of stopping it— did himself nobly. They were outclassed but they made it a hockey game. And we think they had one goal stolen from them—at least, it looked to us to be in, but was not allowed."

Aajmaa Athletic Weekly Chronicle

HOCKEY—The O.B.C. game was called off last Thursday as the students were unable to place a team on the ice. This game will be played later. The Aajmaa Club challenges any team and they are asked to get in touch with Coach Buskard 632-M for dates.

DANCE—The Aajmaa Club held their regular dance at the Club on Tuesday. On Thursday of this week the Aajmaa Club are holding their annual Athletic Ball at Johnstone's Academy. The proceeds are used for building a better lacrosse team this year.

The Club held a successful euchre last Monday and Friday.

The Aajmaa Club tender their sincere sympathy to Mrs. J. Gould, who is at present in the hospital. Joe as everyone knows is the star lacrosse player.

Slim Burdes and Ernie Smith of the Airport are anxious to travel and play exhibition lacrosse in Toronto and Hamilton district this spring. Time will tell?

LACROSSE—Plans are in progress for a successful league this summer. Peterboro and Belleville are sure starters with Cobourg, Campbellford, Millbank and Oshawa contemplating entering. Doug. Runions will be in Belleville, in time to play for us again this summer.

BOXING — The Aajmaa Club have decided to withdraw from boxing and have assigned all boxers to the Stewart-Warner-Alemite Association.

Wilf Cude, Canadiens, kicked out 32 shots at Boston, many of them seemingly setups for Bruin marksmen.

LONDON TECS TIE FOR SECOND

(By the Canadian Press)

Detroit Olympics clung to their lead in the International Hockey League today and to all appearances it will take more than a little to dislodge them. They went from the bottom to the top in one short month and intend to stay.

Notice to this effect was served last night on the Windsor Bulldogs who lost 2-0 to the Detroiters. In the other fixture London Tecumsehs moved into a second-place tie with Buffalo Bisons by downing Buffalo 7-4.

The first two periods were fairly even. London had the edge in scoring but in the last frame they ran completely out of control notching four goals to Buffalo's three.

Sammy Godin, Eddie Ouellette with two, Kenney with two, Jimmy Arnott and Bernie Brophy scored for London with Barton, Roth, Massecar and Cunningham scoring for Buffalo.

KI-Y LEAGUE

The "Y" Preps "A" team battled their way to the championship of the bantam series in the local Ki-Y League at the curling ring last night, when they downed the Maple Leafs by the score of 2 to 1 in a torrid struggle. The clubs had finished their regular schedule tied for first place and a sudden death game was ordered with the result, that the "Y" Preps nosed out a narrow-margin victory to give them the 1935 city bantam championship.

Illsey and Weller were the marksmen for the winning "Y" aggregation while Hays flashed the red light for the only Leaf counter. The winners took the lead in the initial frame and were never headed. The game was keenly contested and well played for bantams.

The line-ups—"Y" Preps "A"—Catton, Graham, Kerr, Illsey, Weller, Lyle, Reed and Jones. Maple Leafs—Goyer, Ostrom, Hays, Asseltine, Rogers, Ackers, Barnes, Fitzgibbon and Herrington.

Referee—"Stewie" McElrath

In a regular midget Ki-Y League fixture the Rangers trimmed the Chihawks by the score of 4 to 1 to elevate the former's standing in their group. Kellaway notched two of the Rangers' with Graine and Palmer being the other marksmen. Miller was the only Chihawk to score.

The line-ups — Rangers — 4 — Thomson, Graine, Helm, Palmer, Kellaway, Keegan, St. Denis, and Goyer. Chihawks —1— Fitzgibbon, Davis, Cavanaugh, Hibbard, Muncaster, Sword and Miller.

Referee—Clare Ridley.

Bankrolls Knock Off Senior and Junior Champs

By ELMER DULMAGE

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Feb. 20— (CP)— As early as this, before the playdown campaigns have properly started Canada's amateur hockey thronerooms are vacant. The professionals lured out the boys. Bankrolls— and not the opposition—knocked off Moncton's senior Hawks and St. Michael's College juniors.

In their divisions, the Hawks and the Irish stood high among the greatest amateur aggregations assembled. Moncton's team was gathered from as far west as Winnipeg. The junior aces came here to college from Saskatchewan and Northern Ontario and some other parts of the Province.

Last night an inexperienced but game St. Michael's team went down fighting in a junior "A" Ontario Hockey Association group playoff, and that means a new Memorial Cup champion will be crowned in late March or early April. The Irish "strong boys" of a year ago were playing for money, when their successors failed.

Pep Kelly, for instance, was helping Toronto Maple Leafs defeat the Maroons at Montreal. Nick Metz and Art Jackson, also owned by the Leafs and Reggie Hamilton were in the Syracuse International league camp.

Lions Qualify

The 1935 Irish team, without these young men, who stood out above nearly all juniors last season, was humbled by Toronto Lions, who qualified to play Oshawa in the group finals. Oshawa, incidentally is favored to win the group handily.

St. Michael's beat the Lions 3-0 in the first playoff game and then lost the second 4-1, tying the round score. In 20 minutes of overtime Saturday they each scored another goal. Back at it again last night, they were tied 2-2 after 60 minutes of battling. The Lions scored in the first overtime stanza.

Moncton's Allan Cup squad didn't go down fighting like this—it merely disintegrated, receiving its death-blow, when the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association's stand against transferred players resulted in the breaking up of the Maritime Amateur Hockey League.

COBOURG RINK YET UNBEATEN

Only Five in This Class on Third Day of 'Spiel'

Toronto, Feb. 20 (CP)—With only five undefeated rinks still in the competitions, play resumed today in the eighth annual Ontario bonspiel.

There were 15 unbeaten rinks when activities started yesterday, but by nightfall the field had narrowed down to five.

Those are the rinks skipped by Rev. J. S. Shortt and Arthur Simon of Barrie; Judge L. V. O'Connor of Cobourg; Harry Weller of Hamilton Thistles; and Herbie Allan of the Toronto Granites.

Casualties among the leaders did not start until the noon draw, when there were 15 games in the Birks-Ellis-Ryrie competition. This session produced three games between unbeaten rinks, A. E. Dunker of Kitchener, defeating F. J. Bailes of Oshawa, 8 to 6, while Davie Walker of Fort William, maintained his own perfect record and marred that of J. P. Robinson of Milton, by a 12 to 11 victory. Allan spoiled the onward rush of R. G. Hall of Kitchener, 15-12. Martin Lindsay of Torontos, lost to his club-mate, Stewart Graham, 13-10, and C. F. Rumsey of Meaford was beaten 12-11, by W. Govenlock of Forest. D. B. Carlyle, of Torontos, lost to W. C. George of Orillia, 14-11, to leave only nine with perfect records.

Playoffs in The City Loop Open Thursday

With four teams facing the barrier the semi-final play-offs in the Belleville City Hockey League swing into action on Thursday night at the Arena, when the league leading Alemites tackle the S. E. A. C. in the curtain-raiser, while the night-cap affair brings together the Grills Garage sextette versus the Trenton squad. All teams in the city league have been materially strengthened for the league semi-finals in order that keen competition and fast hockey may be assured the patrons of the game.

President Harry Rollins announced today, that the semi-final series in the city league would be on the goal basis, the team scoring the greater number of goals in two games, winning the right to enter the finals, to be played later. The semi-finals open at the Arena on Thursday night, with the second game of the semi-finals being scheduled for next Monday eve.

Thursday night's opening game between the S. E. A. C. and the fast Alemite aggregation is creating considerable local interest following the announcement that "Pete" Morgan, ex-Belleville and Brockville speedster, has been signed by the Foster ward kids, along with Murney Green, Ran Card and Ted Bentley. The "lubricants" have added Fred Bentley and "Wink" Wilson of Napanee to their roster. The eligible players for these two teams are: Alemite—Sinfield, Rigby, J. Ethier, Covert, Carl Morgan, Harry Morgan, Hammett, Ridley, Don Lee, Wilson, Bentley and Wilkins. The S.E.A.C. have—Howie, Ran Card, Knott, Pete Goyer, Pepper, Bentley, Hinton, Doran, Pringle, McElrath, Green and Pete Morgan.

The night-cap affair should see a heavy checking game as the former game will be one of speed throughout. Both Grills and Jim Day's Trenton aggregation have strengthened slightly for the final dash for the league championship and a merry battle is expected. The Trentonians had to battle their way into a play-off berth, while the Grills aggregation coasted in rather easily. The eligible players for these two teams are: Grills Garage—Buskard, G. Ethier, W. Henn, T. Henn, Cy. Barriage, Semark, J. McGuire, H. Canning, J. Canning, R. St. Denis, F. McGuire and Day.

Trenton—Gould, Smith, York, Powers, Johnson, Rosenplott, Miller, Kidd, Mattie, Lamore, Lott, Fenton and Richardson. Each team will be allowed to dress 12 men in uniform during the play-offs.

LOVE SCHOOL

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

Then it was over. Mr. McKew Agnes' eyes had been—was it only was thinking of his fat fee, Mrs. last night?

Mother of biscuits in her own. Hunter, as soon as he decently how alone women are! Then don't think could, had stepped out on the porch because he's gone through this mar- for a cigarette," he said. Where riage farce for my sake, you'll ever have him."

"You won't either!" Faith answered with sudden spirit. After all she was now Mrs. Hunter-Barclay. Let this proud selfish woman fight that!

Sherena joined them. His face looked ghastly, as if he had passed through a long illness. "We'll drive you back to town," he said, patting Faith's cold little hand.

Gertrude drew away, as if she couldn't bear to be in the same room with him.

"Take me like police, doesn't she?" Faith murmured gloomily to Faith. "Well, it's up to you now, my child." And it was as if he were begging her to ease his burden, to keep Hunter from his wife.

Faith felt sorry for him. His self-confidence was gone. He was gray, hollowed, Cerivan humbly, beseechingly, as they all said good-by to Mr. and Mrs. Hunter for the last time, Faith made a vow.

Faith wondered if he recognized her as the girl who had fastened the white carnation in his buttonhole in the Bouquet Shop—was it only yesterday afternoon?

On the short main street people turned and stared at them—at Faith in her dusty crumpled taffeta accompanied by a young man in immaculate evening clothes. But Faith didn't tell her anything. She was afraid to ask, so white and set was his face.

"Do you mind if I have a cup of coffee somewhere?" she said in a small voice.

"You poor child!" Barclay stopped short, staring down at her "I'm going to hire a car to get me back to the city, but we'll have breakfast first."

"I do feel a little queer," she admitted. Now that they were alone, she felt shyer, farther away from him than ever. He did nothing to relieve the situation as he swung again toward the small town.

Faith wondered if he recognized her as the girl who had fastened the white carnation in his buttonhole in the Bouquet Shop—was it only yesterday afternoon?

On the short main street people turned and stared at them—at Faith in her dusty crumpled taffeta accompanied by a young man in immaculate evening clothes. But Barclay didn't pay any attention. He wheeled into a dairy restaurant as if he owned it and ordered coffee, toast, and eggs with ham as an afterthought. He got waiting on them eyed Faith with malice and envy.

He said "Thank you," as Faith poured his coffee, He said, "Have a beef, my darling," as Faith reached over his plate for the salt.

Faith drank two cups of coffee, finished her eggs. Then she waited for him to say something, but he seemed absorbed in morose reflection.

"Shall we be starting?" he suggested at last, very politely, as to a chance acquaintance.

"Back to town?" That sounded stupid, of course, they were going back to town. She could hardly expect him to take her on a honeymoon.

The tone of her voice turned him around as if he were conscious of falling her. He looked at her tired young face, the droop of her shoulders. "I'm awfully sorry. It's been beastly for you."

Faith brightened at his friendliness.

But his expression darkened again. "What a ghastly mess," he murmured, more to himself than to her.

Suppose she answered that for her, it was wonderful; the most wonderful thing that had ever happened in her life!

Barclay misunderstood her silence. "You look all in," he said. "I'm a bit seedy myself. We've got a lot to talk over, of course"—he hesitated—"but let's put it off until you feel rested."

Rested, indeed. She didn't want to talk anything over just now, especially anything that threatened her right to be with him.

"I've been trying to make out where I've seen you before. . . . You're looking at her more intently. "I've been trying to make out where I've seen you before. . . . You look familiar, somehow."

So he didn't remember! Faith flushed, her eyes on the carnation he still wore, but which was not fresh as when she had stopped it in his buttonhole. Impulsively she leaned forward, pulled it out, her delicate pointed fingers straightening the wilted petals. "Do you remember now?" and she lifted her eyes that could be green as they young pansies.

"By Jove, you were the girl—and I thought with a little frown. He was remembering Sherena that afternoon.

"Then it was the girl," Faith said simply.

But he had caught himself up again in his reserve, his gloomy look returned. Faith could even the clouded blue of his eyes. His mouth tightened. "Sherena was the only friend I had," he said. The whole putrid business. . . . He gestured impatiently to sweep her aside. "Let's other unpleasant thoughts. "If you don't mind very much, I'll drive the rest of the way. I'm not much of a car." He rose brusquely. Let her. . . .

Would she always associate her with Philip Steuzal Faith fingered the flower a moment and threw it on the floor she hated dead white carnations.

She fought a rising panic as she waited for him. Where would he take her? What would he do? Suppose he didn't come back!

PENTHOUSE SECLUSION

CHAPTER NINE

Faith stirred uneasily, her hand groping over the cool linen as if to ease soft as feathers. She was curled up in a corner, drifting with delicious languor through soundless colorless space. But fringing the dim borderline of sleep were things waiting. They crowded closer through the dark that blotted them back. Shadowy faces, voices disturbingly urgent.

Why didn't Agnes called her, Faith thought drowsily. She should be getting up. Miss Fraser hated her to be late.

There was no Agnes to wake her, no flower shop to go to. She lay quite still as her mind reached back. She wasn't with Mardin any more. She was Mrs. Barclay, Mrs. Hunter Barclay in a penthouse to which Hunter had brought her—when and how?

She remembered now. He hadn't told her and she hadn't asked when they were going when he returned to the restaurant for her in a hired car. She must have slept all the way to town. She remembered sitting up very suddenly and rubbing her eyes as they stopped before the towering grey stone apartment house near the East River.

"I live here," Hunter had said airily, "I should have asked you if there were anywhere else you preferred to go."

Perhaps Faith shouldn't have answered as she did. "When I met Mr. Steven last night I hadn't any home, I hadn't any job and I hadn't any money." It sounded crude and bold as she thought of it. But her head had been floppy with weariness.

What a dusty crumpled little person she must have looked at, meekly, she followed Barclay through the quiet lobby into an elevator. Not much of a trophy to show around that honor!

Then what had happened? Faith lurked up in bed, her eyes wide and brilliant as she glanced down at the white silk sheets drawn across close to her she had selected from Hunter's luxurious wardrobe. Red leather slippers on the blue Chinese rug. A burgundy red brocade dressing gown thrown across a chair. She must have been exhausted to have gone to bed in the morning!

"It can't be true," she said in awe.

A misty gray poured through two windows lighting the watery elegance of cream and blues, the polish of mahogany. Through a half open door shone the white of a bathroom. There was a splash of color on the terrace outside the windows.

Everything was coming back quite clearly. Hunter had felt like a helpless scarred stray cat as Hunter ushered her into a big beautiful room. "I opening on to a terrace garden. "A cigarette? A glass of sherry? Or perhaps you would prefer to lie down for a bit?"

It can't seem to wake up." Faith had confessed. That was all the showing she had made. Everything was a blur—old red velvets, deep leather chairs, mellow rugs, the glint of copper, a tiny ship in a white jacket with the shrivelled face of a monkey, had paddled in dripping his head.

"So, you will have lunch ready for this lady when she wakes," Hunter had said slowly, carefully., "She is to eat you for anything she needs."

"Yes, sor—Missy Blackay," The funny little head had bobbed submissively.

Then Hunter had turned to her with chill courtesy. "I'm going to my Club. I must think this over and decide what to do."

Leaving her, Faith thought turning to prod her pillow, as if she were an unwanted foundling on his doorstep when he had brought her here. That was it, probably. Men were like that—angered when they let themselves in for trouble. And she supposed she was trouble.

She drew herself up in bed, her knees making a little tent of the blue silk coverlet. There were still bits of the picture puzzle she had to sort and fit together. There was the picture of Philip Stevens gambling his life his wife's life away on her chance of the richest husband in New York marrying a little flower girl—nobody. Faith shivered at the thought of Gertrude folded in her strong arms, her dark eyes refusing defeat. She had made an unforgiving enemy of Gertrude.

Well, one thing was certain, she couldn't go back to the old life. She would make Hunter want her, make him glad that this had happened. She was going to be the ragged maid in a fairy tale Faith decided leaping out of bed. And in spite of ogres ever yet stopped a ragged maid from winning her prince. Be-cially when the maid had set fools in the royal palace.

Faith smiled as she hitched up the long silk trousers of Hunter's pajamas, rolling the sleeves back into his long red slippers. His bad luck if she was to have anything she needed. Well she used test those instruction right away.

"Tin," she called gaily, opening the door a crack. His reedy voice answered her kindest at once.

"Tin, can you get me some pyjamas—some pyjamas, you now." Faith didn't really call him for a lipstick. How often in the past hours she had wished for her lipstick which was probably by now in the possession of the police. She must not think of Agnes.

It seemed only a matter of seconds before Tin tapped on the door and handed her a package. White ivory and red sitting like a present. It was a present that Hunter had sent in by his politely explained. How simply gorgeous of him to have realized that she needed all these things!

To the cheerful rush of water in the bathtub, Faith raised her new possessions on a tall white mirrored dresser in the bedroom. Hunter's fastidious eye had picked out the powder shades best suited to her fair skin, the scents for her youth —delicate powder, green bath salts, lotion water, daytime lip rouge and a bottle of haunting French perfume.

Faith glowed before the long mirror on the bathroom door. A slender girl, thrust in white with gold, smelling of flowers.

Beneath the white organdie collar and cuffs ripped off, the black taffeta was quite presentable. Humiliation had left a very different person waiting or him when he got back to the club.

Then Faith, going into the small dining room to set the table, saw that she was ravenous, saw the tabloid paper on the chair. Her name smeared at the top of the page, staring black against white, blinding and terrible.

For lack of any more important sensation that day they had made a hero called Faith Stevens' youth. Just as Roger had warned her they would.

Concentrate later, Faith sat before a charming little table Tin had prepared for her among flowers beside a fountain on the terrace. She had not touched the golden-brown flesh of a little squab on toast, the slim tender beans and endive salad. Heedless of its rich aroma, she swallowed a cup of black coffee, re-read the first three sentences in a stony stupor.

The whole paper lay at her feet. It had a picture of the house, the fatefull window from which Agnes had jumped, marked by a black cross. There was also an artist's fancy of the scene preceding the suicide. But was it suicide, the reporter question-ed, or an accident? Miss Agnes Delicate Miss Faith Martin, the Duchess of Hill" as Agnes had sometimes called her. Someone must have told the reporter that.

My sister Gladdis and Harvey came around after supper and me and Gladdis started to have a bout ladies clothes, ma saying, I think the spring air has made them attractive in a sort of a way. I wonder if nobody will look at you unless you're wearing a dress of some printed stuff, or rather I mean everybody will stare at you, she said.

Yes, mostly dark prints with stockings and gloves to match, very smart. Gladdis said, and pop said "I understand the bolder dressed men are going in for blue serges with trousers to match, Harvey.

And how about hats? Harvey said, I understand mens hats are going to be every shape except the shape you see them in the shop windows, no matter how you try. The accessories are very striking for men, nobody can go parsley in the buttonhole will be the final touch mister, which will do much better to stay home, he said, and me said, Sure if you've said do anything but interrupt with your silly ignorants let's start rite in and play some bridge.

Now dont mind us, you and Gladdis go rite on exchanging notes and Harvey and I will drop around to Pete's and bowl a little, pop said, and me said, You'll do nothing of the kind, the idear sich an idear.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED
(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)
By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Mighty fingers closed upon the vicious dog's throat!

Tarzan rose, struck the clawing body once, and cast it aside. At the same time a voice from the open door called: "EMMA!" There was no response.

Repeating the call, the man came toward the tree. Tarzan saw he was a tall, broad-shouldered fellow in the uniform of a Red officer. The ape-man withdrew into the tree trunk's shadow as the man, still calling for the dog, came closer.

The Red did not see the savage beast, crouching now, awaiting him. When he was within ten feet, Nkima Sabor springs to the kill. Tarzan leaped for him. The speed and weight of his body hurled the Red to the ground.

Powerful fingers prevented an outcry and a moment later Tarzan had accomplished his purpose. Quickly he stripped off the fellow's clothes, bound and gagged him. Ten minutes later in the officer's uniform, Tarzan boldly walked down the street.

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

NEW YORK FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 20 (AP)—Selective buying in industrials gave the stock market an irregularly higher tendency today.

In the Canadian section of the list shares of Dome, McIntyre, International Nickel and Canadian Pacific ruled about unchanged to small fractions higher. On the curb Lake Shore improved slightly. Dominion Government 4s gained a trifle. Canadian funds were 1-16 of a cent lower at 99 15-16 cents.

Stocks showing gains of major fractions to more than a point by early afternoon included Continental Can, Columbian Carbon, Air Reduction, Westinghouse Electric, Ingersoll Rand, Fairbanks Morse, Mesta Machine, Glidden and a few others. Chesapeake Corp. and Briggs and Stratton jumped 2 points American Telephone rose fractionally.

Consolidated Gas and Public Service of N. J. declined a point, North American and American Water Works fractionally, to new lows.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 20—(CP)—The industrial share market indulged in a mild sell-off in the early session today on small volume but the tone was much improved after midday when the New York Exchange recorded a stiffening of prices. The general show of weakness was not shared by the steel stocks which, according to street report, are due for some new business shortly The Canadian Car and Foundry stocks as well as National Steel Car and Dominion Steel were up fractions to a point.

The weak spots included Nickel, C.P.R. Brazilian and some of the banks and liquor issues. Foods, utilities and miscellaneous issues maintained a firm to strong tone.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb 20—(CP)—McWatters cut loose again today and advanced to 1.12 up 10 cents on volume that appeared to usurp half the space on the tape for a time. The general performance of the mines was sluggish on the whole during the morning session and losses were general but these were made up in the majority of cases in the early afternoon when buying improved.

Action continued slow in the senior gold. Base metal and silver stocks and while medium price golds claimed the attention, along with McWatters, Gunnar, God's Lake, Siscoe, Central Patricia, Sylvanite and Macassa changed hands in volume. Most of these dipped during the morning and came later. Siscoe sold up to 29.92 and Prospectors Airways climbed 40 cents to 2.10 on small volume.

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, Feb. 20 (AP)— The stock market was reactionary today with selling momentum increasing sharply in the late trading. Losses of 1 to around 2 points were registered by Sante Fe, U. S. Smelting, Consolidated Gas, Public Service of N.J., American Telephone, Case and Union Pacific. The late tone was heavy. Transfers approximated 1,200,000 shares.

SIR MALCOLM CAMPBELL SHATTERS STOCK CAR RECORDS

At the wheel of a fully-equipped, standard Hudson Eight sedan, Sir Malcolm Campbell, famed British speed star, raced over the Daytona Beach course this week to set a whole series of new Class C. stock car records. His coming attempt to better the world's fastest time for speed on land with his new "Bluebird" will be made over the same course. An interesting point is the fact that Sir Malcolm's Hudson was equipped with the electric hand, enabling him to shift gears without taking his eyes off the narrow sand strip or to keep both hands on the wheel. Photo shows: Sir Malcolm Campbell beside the Hudson Eight on Daytona Beach at the finish of the record breaking runs.

BLOODSTAINS ON TROUSERS SAYS DR. E. FRANKISH

Arrives at Conclusion by Well Known Scientific Test

BROTHERS TESTIFY

Insurance Documents Not Allowed in As Exhibits

Fifteen stains were found on the pair of pants allegedly worn by Vermilyea and handed to Dr. Frankish for examination by the police and of these a number showed to be human blood stains, according to evidence offered by Dr. Frankish when the witness stand late Wednesday afternoon. He stated he arrived at this conclusion through extensive tests, known to all versed in the science.

Witness had tested 15 stains on the pants, he said.

Q. And as you took them from the pants, you didn't know whether they were soup or blood.

The test was a precipitation test, said witness known to all versed in the science.

Q. When did you start giving evidence in criminal matters as a witness—30 years or less? A. Less. It was the Gibson case, 18 or 20 years ago.

Q. You have always since then given evidence for the crown? A. I believe I have.

Witness said he had been appointed to the department in 1920 permanently.

Q. This has no connection with ballistics? A. No.

Witness under further questioning by Col. Greer said he had tested about 8 years ago to test blood stains. The method of how to test blood was slowly and carefully explained by Dr. Frankish. Through the use of this examination the test is carried on until the final analysis of the blood or otherwise is completed, he said.

No Knowledge of Type

Q. Human blood divides itself into four types, doesn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the type of blood on the pants? A. No.

WITCHCRAFT DRIVE STIRRED BY SLASHING

Williamsport, Pa., Feb. 21 (AP) —Four investigating agencies united today in a new drive against hexing in Central Pennsylvania as authorities, stirred by the butcher knife slashing of a baby boy, declared ancient superstition prevalent in Lycoming County.

Latest victim of the strange practices which have occurred through vigorous campaigns by the State is eight-months-old James Lenker, Jr., in a hospital here with deep gashes in his head.

District Attorney John M. Youngman says the cuts were inflicted by the baby's father, James John Fritz, Jr., five, after the older boy had been pronounced "cured by faith" of a "spell" for which his father" blamed "unfriendly neighbors."

Garage-Owner Testifies Before the Commissioner Owner of Stored Motor Erased Record on Ledger

Vermilyea Had Borrowed $1,000 on Property, Court Told

COMMISSION EVIDENCE

Graphologist Reports Results of Findings on Signatures

Belleville, Ont., Feb. 21.—(CP)—The Crown early this afternoon rested its case against Harold W. Vermilyea charged with the murder of his mother last October 4.

Mr. Justice Henderson, with evidence of a handwriting expert and photographs taken by an Inquiry Commission in California. The latter witnesses were Inspector Hamar Greenwood, of the Provincial Police and Chief of Police James Locke, of Ontario, Calif. who were recalled to give evidence concerning Vermilyea's car, allegedly driven by the accused, while Vermilyea, the Crown charged, was in Belleville and killed his mother.

Erasure of Record Referred To

That a motorist who had a car in The Glades Ave., (Los Angeles), garage from November 25, to December 6, 1934, whom he identified by a photograph shown him before the taking of evidence by Commission at San Bernardino early this week as the accused man, had asked him to destroy the record of the registration of ownership of the car was the testimony of Alphonse Poulaine, garage owner, Los Angeles, given today at the Vermilyea murder trial. Poulaine's evidence was that the man said it was a peculiar request as he was supposed to be using the car while it was in the garage. Entries of registration had been scratched out once by the owner of the vehicle, who had seized an eraser and rubbed out marks on the ledger page, so the witness stated.

Other testimony taken by Commission and allowed today was to the effect that a banker had renewed a loan for a small amount of money for Vermilyea last September, but that Vermilyea's lands were later given to Eugene Lent who paid and that he had on September 10, 1934, secured a loan of $1,000 on the property and that if a request had been made by Vermilyea the loan would have been large as the property would warrant it. This evidence was given by Lent viva voce money taken before Commissioner Thow at Los Angeles.

Graphologist At Trial

A. B. Farmer, graphologist, identified the writing of "B. Carter" on the Walker House (Toronto) hotel register and that of "B. Corsons" in the Commodore (Toronto) hotel register as those of Vermilyea. He also identified the handwriting on letters and documents.

Alphonse Poulaine, Los Angeles garage owner, was the first witness, told of a car being stored from September 25 to October 6 (The Crown alleges Vermilyea killed his mother the night of October 4 and returned to Belleville, driving home by taxi, train and airplane.)

Pertinency of evidence revealed he had been shown a photograph of the car owner by a sheriff and said, "That looks like unless he has a twin brother."

SCHOONER SETH PARKER ARRIVES AT PACOPACO

Sailing Gear Flapping and Pumps Working On Arrival

Tutuila, American Samoa, Feb. 21 —(AP)— Without a stitch of sailing gear flapping from her masts and her pumps working continuously, the Schooner Seth Parker anchored at Pacopaco today.

The little sailing ship, whose distress calls ten days ago echoed around the world and brought the H.M.A.S. Australia with the Duke of Gloucester aboard to her aid, was towed into port of the U.S. naval station on Tutuila last night (4.30 a.m. today, E.S.T.).

Although not badly damaged the craft on which Phillips Lord, Master and "down east" radio character known as Seth Parker, hoped to sail around the word, was a sorry plight.

All of her masts were still standing but one or two spars had been torn away, her jig sail was ripped to ribbons and minor pieces of fly-ing gear were torn loose by the South Sea storm she weathered.

QUAKE EXPOSES ANCIENT RUINS

Large Stone Stairways of Maya Civilization Exposed

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, Feb. 21 — The discovery of big stone staircases exposed by recent earthquakes leading to subterranean palaces of a 1,700-year-old Maya civilization was announced by Gustav Stromsvik, head of an archaeological commission of the Carnegie Institution of Washington now working at Copan.

Mr. Stromsvik said the discovery revealed Copan was the most important ancient centre of the Maya civilization yet found, and added he had established that the ancient Mayas knew uses of gold heretofore unsuspected.

Under a huge statue of a warrior he found a pair of solid gold hooks, less than two inches high and marvelously wrought. He discovered various cross-shaped rooms of stone with floors surprisingly well preserved under a coat of scratchy paint.

Big stone canals and a sewerage system connecting large underground buildings were described by Mr. Stromsvik, who said the treasures were of the utmost value to American archaeological history and when fully uncovered, would startle the scientific world.

The buildings, he said, contained large amphitheatres. In them were found stone statues and monoliths of colored stone, which bore fine stylized collars and other objects will indicate an entirely new light on the branch of Maya civilization.

Recent earthquakes, which have caused much destruction and loss of life, have opened up galleries where none had been known to exist before.

SAILING CRAFT IN RACE MISSING

Probably Lying in Lee of Some Islands From Storm

Miami, Fla., Feb. 21 (AP)— Two sailing craft, with five persons aboard, which participated in the recent Miami-to-Nassau yacht race, were reported unaccounted for on a return trip to Miami today, coast guard officials announced.

The Ketch Esperanza, carrying Ill. owner, S. W. Parish of Beaumont, Texas, Captain Carl Holm Mlami and a crew of three, Ilmo was listed as missing yesterday.

Today the auxiliary cruiser Lansdowne, owned by Alexander C. Bowe, of Port Washington, L. I., and carrying a crew of five, was unreported.

Lord G. H. Beorraman who conducted an unsuccessful aerial search for the Esperanza yesterday in a coast guard seaplane was to search today in an effort to find a trace of the two missing craft.

Both yachts left Nassau Sunday enroute to Miami.

Coast guard officials expressed belief neither yacht need necessarily be in danger and said it is probable they are lying in the lee of one of the many small islands that dot the Bahaman waters.

MYSTERIOUS FALL FROM AEROPLANE KILLS TWO GIRLS

Witness Says They Were Clasped Hand in Hand

CONSUL'S DAUGHTERS

Pilot Misses Passengers When Out Over English Channel

By The Associated Press

Upminster, England, Feb. 21— Two beautiful girls, daughters of the United States consul-general at Naples, plunged 1,500 feet to their deaths from an aeroplane near here today and friends said they started on their last flight heart-broken over the recent deaths of two officers of the Royal Air Force.

They fell from a passenger plane, on which they had engaged for eight seats, speeding to Paris. Horrified witnesses saw the plane pirouetted to the ground "clasped hand in hand in a last embrace." They were Elizabeth Du Bois, 22, and Jane Du Bois, 20.

Reports from Naples where the girls' father, Coert Du Bois, has been stationed for some time, said Jane was engaged to marry Flying Officer John A. C. Forbes while her sister Elizabeth was reported engaged to Flight-Lieut. Henry Longfield Beatty. The two officers were among the nine victims of the crash of the big British flying-boat "Ace of Diamonds" near Mostra, Italy, last week.

Affected by Loss

London friends of the girls, the only children of Coert Du Bois of San Francisco, stationed at Naples, said the girls' grief was uncontrollable over the loss of their friends. The girls had been with the British fliers when the flying boat was in Naples returning Germany and the early part of the month.

They had just come to England from Germany on the famous flying boat visiting.

Two sealed letters were found on the plane, flown back to its base after Pilot J. Kirton, had discovered the girls' corpses and the cabin door open while he was over the channel some time after they fell. One was addressed to their father and the other to their mother, Scotland Yard detectives came to investigate.

An official of Hillman Air Lines, operators of he plane said "A cabin door could easily be opened from the inside." He stated it was questionable as to whether the pressure from the slipstream of the propeller would be sufficiently strong to hold the door shut. The plane was being overhauled following the early-morning disappearance of the Belgian financier, Jacques Errera, who fell from a plane over the channel in 1928, and was never found.

An attendant at the West End Hotel where they stayed in London said they had breakfast there the last day or two, they appeared to have been unusually depressed. They seemed rather hysterical and cried a lot."

Pilot Kirton said the sisters appeared to be agitated when they boarded the airport reparatory to boarding the plane.

Indefinite Stay Of Execution in Hauptmann Case

Trenton, N.J. Feb. 21 (AP)—The execution of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, convicted murderer of Charles Lindbergh, was stayed indefinitely at 12.15 p.m. today when a certificate of error was filed with the clerk of the State prison.

Hauptmann had been sentenced to die the week of March 18.

Defense counsel Frederick A. Pope and C. Lloyd Fisher presented a writ of error to Deputy Clerk Hanson clerk, within an hour after they had tyled the original writ with the Clerk of the Court of Errors and Appeals, the State's highest tribunal.

Argument on the writ will be heard either in the May or October term of the court.

The defence has indicated it will seek to have the argument postponed until the latter date, which with the time required for handling down the decision and the further possible appeal to the Court of Pardons would delay the execution of the death sentence until some time early next year.

Hospital Superintendent Tells of Mental State of Accused's Relative; Behaviour Is Described

Illness of Gerald Vermilyea Referred To By Dr. Cumberland

FIRST DEFENCE WITNESS

Detail Records In Case of Relative of Accused Are Given

Defence Counsel R. H. Greer, K.C., this afternoon marshalled his witnesses in an attempt to clear his client, Harold W. Vermilyea of the charge of murder of his mother, with the resumption of Court in the afternoon, and the calling of Dr. T. D. Cumberland, as first witness the defence opened. Dr. Greer questioned the witness, Superintendent of the Ontario Hospital at Kingston, in detail regarding the late Fred and regarding Gerald Vermilyea, confined in the hospital. From a brief case, the well dressed and quiet witness produced voluminous records of the two men. Witness asked the privilege of having the original records returned to the hospital. "We'll make copies", agreed Col. Greer.

Fred Vermilyea was admitted May 4, 1912. He died in June 13, 1916.

Gerald was admitted April 8, 1922. He is still there, said witness. Fred was 31 years of age when admitted and Gerald was 20 years. Witness did not know Gerald.

Q. What's Gerald's condition? A. At the time of Gerald's admittance, witness was present with five other officers of the hospital and had been personally examined.

Q.—How long has this man been mentally sick until the time he had been admitted?

A.—Well, in my opinion, he had been ill 4 or 5 years prior to admission.

Q.—What do you say as to his general appearance then?

A.—Gerald's conduct? He was very impulsive, had hallucinations, suffered delusions of grandeur, was reclusive, non-co-operative, not fitting into the routine of the hospital. He resented the hallucinations and at times he did not become safe.

Q.—Was he a dangerous man, in your opinion?

A.—Well, not exactly.

A. "I would say mentally sick", supplied witness.

Use of Term "Insane"

Since 1930 when he took over, said witness, the term "insane" had been started to be used.

"Why?" asked Justice Jeffrey, "because some of the people can't handle a lunatic, other times you ask to have a person declared sane?"

Witness replied that the word "insane" was attached to documents of legal nature.

Col. Greer referred them to the names of various mental conditions.

You may use the expression sick or mentally ill, but the statute under which you operate refers to the phrase "insane".

Witness nodded.

Gerald was confined under an Inspector's Warrant, said witness. The charge was insanity "and the danger of being at large."

Col. Greer pressed this point. "It was an Inspector's Warrant?"

A.—Yes.

Medical Forms

Mr. Urquhart, in asking the witness referred to medical history forms and questions put upon committal to the institution.

The physician's certificate of Gerald was read by witness. He sheet charged nervous conduct, delusions of grandeur and was sure to hold his physician that neighbors were crawling up the walls; he was worried about his head and his blood pressure, conditions in the country and other things, it further charged that he had thrown his bed out in an imaginary person, had broken neighbors windows, and had poured out many pails of water in his bed room. He was down periodic talking.

Clinical Notes

An objection to the methods of Mr. Urquhart questioning was noted here. Mr. Urquhart confined to "He broke windows in neighbors apartments, was dangerous when at large and so on?" A. Yes.

Q. Have you the clinical notes made at the hospital. A Yes.

Q. On April 12, 1932 as the result of an examination it was revealed that little change in manner and habits of the patient had been noted except that he had become more uncommunicative. At times he lapsed into more cheerful periods. This was four days after he had been admitted.

Behaviour

On the 15th of April alsters visited the hospital to see the patient and said that they had witness that their brother had been in a 'dreadful like condition' since 1930. Not only his family, but several friends had been aware of this condition. It had been noted that he would play with children for hours at a time. He had been very unsociable, in contrast to his former sunny and cheerful nature. The sisters further stated witness of their brother worrying about conditions in the country. He had formerly been a lively, well read and an intelligent conversationalist. People had liked him.

Medical Records

Mr. Urquhart delved further into the clinical record. "In one note there is reference to him pacing the floor, holding his hands to his head, saying that he would die. Crown pointed out page five of the record.

Question of Records

Col. Greer—May I ask what my friend is reading? I know nothing of what he has. He appears to have something I haven't.

Justice Jeffrey—You are entitled to every record you wish." Mr. Urquhart then handed the records the Crown possessed.

Q. Did Gerald on arising seem with nothing to follow this examination.

"You could have gotten all this information—Are you not entitled to it?" asked Justice Jeffrey.

Col. Greer—I imagine one would stroke-time gravel-todd witness attempted such.

Defence maintained that if Crown had these documents a copy should have been supplied Mr. Payne or himself.

Judge's Comment

Justice Jeffrey calmly pointed out that they (defence) were entitled privileged to have had the documents examined.

Mr. Urquhart — The defence could have had these if they had wanted.

"Was there any rule to prevent you," asked the Judge, "documents mented the Court.

Copy of Report

Witness said he did not know the brother Fred but from the diary of the latter he compiled a copy of a report on his condition.

Defence objected at this point to the report, stating it anything but an original file. The questions proceeded.

Fred had been "abnormally suggestible" and had shown a dislike for people, that he was at times depressed and was addicted to rumination, said witness.

"There was no good reason for doing so (running away)," stated witness, "except a mental one."

Mr. Urquhart continued. "... with hands to head?" A—Yes. Question—Had Gerald been subjected to examination of the patient in 1920. "Will you just read your notes after the Inspector's Warrant?"

Transcript Read

Witness read out aloud in his hurriedly spoken transcript of an apartment house in which he, (the patient), had been living had burned down and of an especial and distressing fire in another apartment neighbor. The ill man had accused the neighbor of setting fire to the floor, "Several times Mrs. Vermilyea was awakened by the throwing of water on the floor and on another. He had said he "would stop this woman talking and was throwing my shoes to warn her". The ill man further suffered delusions of grandeur and believed his memory was very wealthy. Again reference was made to the neighbor woman as "a mind reader, who could probe his innermost thoughts and secrets". At other times he had been a despersate state.

Q.—That was one considered of long standing? A—Yes, we considered it long standing. Q.—Was it delusions? A—Yes.

Q.—Will they could not be corrected by reason or explanation? A —No.

Q.—After he let this water on the floor, or threw the boots, would he stay to tell why he did it. A—Yes. This point was carefully emphasized by Mr. Urquhart.

Two-Piano Recital Opens Series, Flawless Technique Exemplified

PROGRAM VARIED

Members of the Canadian Concert Association of this city had the opportunity of hearing last evening a two-piano recital by Etta Coles and Naomi Yahova, brilliant young musicians, whose artistry held the audience spell-bound during a particularly well arranged programme. Mr. P. C. MacLaurin, president of the local association, introduced the artists and referred to their afternoon concert at which the students of he Collegiate Institute and Vocational School were privileged to attend in a body through the co-operation of the association.

Mozart's Sonata in D Major was chosen to open the first part of the program which was more serious in nature and the skill of the artists was at once apparent. The tones of the two pianos blended with exquisite delicacy, giving always the impression of one instrument. With flawless technique, brilliance, feeling and yet with power, the pianists swept from the Allegro con spirito movement to the Andante and Allegro Molto, giving full value to the melodic passages of the latter. Debussy's "Jeux, Joy of Man's Desiring" arranged for two pianos by Ehle Horne, and the Fantastic and Fugue, A Minor, arranged by Bach-Old Bauer, were a delight, clear, forceful with perfect shading.

Turning to the more impressionistic school, the artists were next heard in Ravel's charming "Mother Goose Suite," a collection of piquant pieces built around fairy tale themes. The tender Pavane of the Sleeping Beauty, the capricious Hop o' My Thumb, the charming effect of a tiny orchestra the Laideron-ette, Empress of the Pagodas, and the gentle tones and growling passages of the conversation between Beauty and the Beast were particularly pleasing and were followed by the Spanish Rhapsody of Liszt, arranged by Ernest Hutcheson. This group concluded with Saint Saens, descriptive Aquarium, the familiar The Cuckoo in the Depths of the Woods and a ringing Scherzo.

The melodies Andantino Varie of Schubert was played with lyric brightness while the strongly expressive Rakocsky March of Liszt, arranged by Ernest Hutcheson, rendered with fervour and brought an ovation by the audience.

Graciously responding again and again to encores, the young musicians gave a brilliant rendition of the favorite Blue Danube Waltz, a spirited comedy suite and a sweeping Polka. Seated at their large piano the artists made lovely silhouettes against the rich red draperies of the stage. Miss Coles tall and graceful, Miss Yahova small and vivacious, both being crowned alike in black velvet. At the conclusion of the program they were presented with roses on behalf of the Association.

The audience was enthusiastic in their reception to the musicians and felt that the privilege of hearing two such artists alone had made the formation of a Concert Association well worth while.

Fish and Bay

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

Are we too late?

Can this fish come back in the Bay of Quinte?

Can you imagine the sportsman's paradise this old bay must have been before netting cleaned them practically out. Today with our fish nets and casting rods and the bay full of fish of all kinds we would find the shores lined with summer cottages from one side to the other. Farmers in all lines not getting the revenue they would have received from leasing the land border-ing its shores. What have we today?

Pickerel very scarce.

Bass can be found in scattered spots.

Perch and rock bass very scarce. Where have they all gone?

Our local fishermen say it does not pay to put their nets in. Yet this fall when allowed to take the upper bay which has been closed to fishing for a number of years, they had so many nets in that that Mr. Fish would have to just sit down and not think his head if he wasn't to be caught. Now what about the hoop nets, the most deadly trap of all. They are so placed that no fish can get by them and yet no fish but a minnow fingerling can get through or out of them.

These hoop nets are placed in or near the mouth of creeks and along marshes and weedy beds. Here is where pickerel ball, pike smoky and all fish feed and spawn. They are put out as soon as the ice goes out and before at this time of the year fish have had time to spawn. They are taken ... they 60, fifteen to a gang ... and they are disappearing in two more years there will be hardly a pike left in the Bay. How can we fine them when they are not given a chance to spawn before being trapped?

As regards our local fishermen they admit they would starve if they had to depend on the bay for revenue. They go to the Bay only in summer to fish, return in the fall and fish the bay until ice, only failing to give a profit in the bay and is not a paying proposition why not close the bay to netting of all kinds and give the fish a chance to come back? Can you realize the enormous revenue that would be taken in surrounding this old bay if good fishing was assured the tourist. There are mighty fine American tourists who would pay liberal sums for a day's fishing and would be satisfied. Lucky to land a few small perch as it is now. Mighty lucky if he happened on a small school of bass.

Is there nothing that can be done to save the fish or must we just sit back and watch the tourist trade go by to northern waters. I think I may say I have expressed the feelings of hundreds of lovers of sport and native to some extent and would be very much pleased to see some steps taken as regards this very important matter.

Yours truly,
Ardent lover of Fish and Game.

Police News

Minor motor accidents constituted the majority of the activities in and around local police circles Wednesday. A slight accident happened at the upper end of Front Street, when a truck, driven by William Howard and an automobile driven by O. D. Clapp, both drivers being local citizens, collided. Fender damage and a bent bumper constituted the damage incurred. No person was injured and the accident was attributed to icy pavement. The master was immediately settled after being reported to the authorities.

One even dozen tenements slumbered in the cell block at the police station Tuesday night, another motor accident, that implicated an automobile and a truck, was reported to the police Wednesday night. Again only fender damage resulted, the accident happening on West Moira Street when the motor car skidded into the rear of a truck.

Thursday morning, a variety in local police circles, no arrests being necessary in Belleville during the past 24 hours. Fifteen transients slept in warm quarters at the police station last night, but all had the "move on", when released this morning.

Although Provincial Police searched well the surrounding countryside for Albert Belanger, who escaped from the authorities after being arrested nearly twenty hours on the C.N.R. coal chutes on a charge of stealing coal, no visible sign of the escaped prisoner was forth-coming. Out-going highways and by-ways were closely guarded, but Belanger apparently broke through the police cordon and escaped. A vivid description of Belanger was dispatched to his home town, Ottawa, following his escape from the authorities, where it is thought he will be apprehended soon. The remaining four youths, who are being held locally in custody, will be turned over to the Ottawa police today or tomorrow, when they appear in the Capital City, where they will face numerous charges of theft, including the theft of a seven passenger Cadillac sedan. Other charges of breaking and entering are expected to be laid in the meantime.

BRAN PRODUCT
THE popularity of bran as a cereal to promote regular habits has brought forth all kinds of bran products. Some of these contain only a small quantity of bran. Naturally, many purchasers have been disappointed by certain of these products.
It's the actual amount of bran in a cereal that counts. Most individuals require an all-bran product for effective results. Bran furnishes the "bulk" needed to correct common constipation. Within the body, this "bulk" absorbs moisture and forms a soft mass. Gently, this clears out the intestinal wastes.
Kellogg's ALL-BRAN is the most popular product of its kind in the world. It is used regularly, with success, by millions of people. It is all bran just as the name implies—with nothing added except the flavor of Malt, Sugar and Salt.
Whenever you purchase bran, read the wording on the package. Make sure by getting Kellogg's ALL-BRAN—in the red-and-green package. Sold by all grocers.

INTEREST IS MAINTAINED

Any man who says that the people of Belleville do not take an interest in such a subject as banking was not present at the address given on Tuesday evening by Prof. Knox of Queen's University, Kingston, on "The Bank of Canada". Prof. Knox knows the banking question thoroughly for though questioned by bankers and others he was able to answer the interrogations on a moment's notice. Not only bankers but citizens of almost every walk of life were present at this, the fifth address of the Better Citizenship series sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce. The chamber is to be praised for bringing so eloquent and so thoughtful a thinker as Mr. Knox as well as the other professors of Queen's who have appeared in the four other meetings, Prof. Matheson, Prof. J. A. Roy, Dr. H. A. Kent and Prof. Alexander.

The sustained interest which the series has been creating is a herald of a good attendance at the three lectures yet to be delivered, one on the railways, another on business practices and the third on Canadian problems from the Westerner's viewpoint.

CIVILIZED WORLD HORRIFIED

Decapitation of women convicted of being spies has brought down upon the Nazi authorities in Germany almost universal condemnation. Already the axe has fallen and several more may fall victimes to this bloody method of treating those who fall foul of the government.

There is the natural repugnancy to beheading which would in itself stir up adverse sentiment, but the bringing of women to the block adds horror to an already horrible method.

How far women can be spies and what constitutes spying in Germany is of course something of which the world is not quite certain.

France earned the most awful name for treating many noble and innocent citizens to death by the guillotine during the Revolution.

English sentiment revolts at this manner of execution, as England centuries ago put a end to that method.

The method of executing women for spying is something that few countries of the world can agree with.

WOMEN IN PULPITS

Belleville Presbytery of the United Church spoke pronouncedly against the admission of women into the ministry. At a meeting in Belleville the question was thoroughly canvassed and the result was a 56 to 21 vote against the suggestion.

Recently from the highest council in the church the question was referred to the presbyteries for voting and the votes will be reported to the General Council.

A woman in Toronto was asked in reference to the matter pointed out that women would not crowd in even if the barriers were removed, as she knew their devotion to the church was tremendous.

What the General Council of the church will do with the question remains to be seen, but the opinions of men are split. In the six presbyteries voting Tuesday there were three for and three against.

The presence of a woman minister would be new to the congregations of the United Church. While women have spoken from the front of the churches, the ministry itself has not been opened to them.

The next meeting of the General Council will be interesting from the standpoint of the reaction to vote, though if there is not a substantial majority of presbyteries voting in favor, it is though to be quite unlikely that any action will be taken to open the way to the appearance of women into the full charge of congregations.

ADULT EDUCATION

In Toronto the other day a number of parents went for afternoon classes which were held in the rooms just vacated by the children. The subject of study was the instruction of children in child-training. This is a worthwhile endeavor and its success should mean a great deal toward improvement of conditions.

There may be changes ahead in education which will bring about adult education or there may not. The world is in flux and in Denmark scholars go to school up to fourteen, then go to work until eighteen and go back to the folk-high schools until twenty-five. Is the Dane showing a way out of the surplus of labor and the unemployment situation? Or does this suit only Denmark? or is it a real success in Danmark? According to Miss Emily Guest who was here recently, it is such a success that city people send their sons and daughters to the county (or folk) high schools to get that training.

Adult education may some day before long become a vital factor in the economic situation.

Repentance to be of any avail must work a change of heart and conduct.—Cuyler.

CANADIAN SITUATION

The composite index of business in Canada for January stood at only 8.7 per cent. below "normal", Mr. Babson says. The Sun Life's report reflects a return of confidence. We seem to be on our way to recovery.

It is well for us to pay attention to these indications, to analyze them closely and reach reasoned judgments about them. We have so got in the habit of thinking of the depression as something that has come to stay that we are a little dubious of the times growing better. In the early days of 1929 we would not think of a retreat from the highs of the time; now we are reluctant to believe in the future. Both attitudes are unreasonable.

The history of business shows periods of depression followed by periods of prosperity, and the accentuation of unemployment by the machine is only one of many economic factors. It does not dominate the scene. During depressions adjustments take place, and when they are over prosperity returns. The signs of recovery which we have cited are indications that necessary adjustments are taking place. When we learn from Mr. Babson that this time last year business activity was 23.2 per cent. below normal and now it is only 8.7 per cent. below, we can hardly fail to be struck by the significance of the figures. Habits of thought and the perennial pessimism would tend us to a trend which should inspire us with confidence and to renewed effort.—Hamilton Spectator.

THOR OR THE GALILEAN

The book, "The Mythos of the Twentieth Century," written by Hitler's educational dictator, has been placed by the Pope upon the index of forbidden books. This at least should cause thoughtful people to look into the doctrines with some care. German youth is travelling today along the path laid out by Herr Rosenberg. According to him the so-called Christian virtues—meekness, humility, charity, pacifism, moral continuity—are essentially inferior to the German virtues of strength, courage, manliness, militarism, and belief in racial purity. Popular frenzies have always been a mainspring in the ebb and fuss in the course of history, and the modern philosophy of the Absolute State is full of dynamite for all the peoples of the world.

Hitler appeals to what Bismarck used to call the "imponderables". We are all surfeited with economics. We have completely forgotten that man does not live by bread alone. Any other emphasis, even though false, is a relief. The Crooked Cross has brought back into Germany to him a vitality which he never had in the days of his prime. Science has furnished him with new armour, and he is going to prove it.

What we are seeing today is like the rage of Caliban beholding his own natural face in a glass. Hitler, in his own words, is going to build peace "upon the v clorious sword of a ruling race bending the world to the service of a higher civilization." He is going to make it create right. It is as remote as possible from the Gospel of Nazareth. Thor is again issuing his challenge to the Galilean.—Montreal Gazette.

SCHOLARS IN EXILE

The distinguished scholars who have found a place among the "Universities in Exile" have not said, as did the people in exile in Babylon, "How can we sing our songs in a strange land?" They have gone forward with their teaching and their researches "functioning as a faculty in a foreign land" without loss of even a semester in their work. Fifty years or more ago most of our American students looking forward to graduate work and the degree of doctor of philosophy, spent some time in a German university. But, as Dr. Alvin Johnson has pointed out in his report for the first year, in the coming of the 'exiles' to America they have literally brought a German faculty to our own doors—and equal to the best Germany ever boasted." This is a large claim, but it cannot be doubted that men who would sacrifice all their prospects in their homeland rather than forfeit their freedom to follow the truth, have at any rate the first essential of true scholarship.

What seemed at first only an attempt to give shelter to men of eminence who were in distress and without employment gives promise of being a unique contribution to educational history. The faculty list is an imposing one, including men of scholarly eminence, of practical affairs and of experience in the editing of scientific journals. They were expelled from their posts in Germany "essentially for one reason: they chose to be free."—New York Times.

Late repentance is seldom true, but true repentance is never too late.—R. Venning.

SONG FOR TWILIGHT

Men love the sun and greet with joy
Its beams untainted by alloy,
Sunworshipers in truth are they
Who thrill with every dawn of day,
And yet how grateful shadows are,
How kind the dusk and evening star!

Men love their toil, each freeman asks
His share of usefulness in tasks
That fill the hours with content,
The coin they keep, when gold is spent.
Yet still, to every weary breast
How sweet is sleep, how dear is rest!

GHOSTS OF THE OLD COVERED WAGGON DAYS with memories of months of arduous labor trekking across the great Western plains would tremble at the magic of modern transportation facilities. Airplanes with Deisel engines will soon take passengers from the Atlantic to the Pacific between breakfast and supper for less than ten dollars each, according to Arthur Brisbane, chief editor of the Hearst publications, who tells his readers to "Write that down as a prophecy" which he asserts is bound to be fulfilled.

UNCLE SAM HAD A BIG SCARE when the Supreme Court of the United States deliberated on the government's action on the gold question. Would the Supreme Court created by Uncle Samuel himself, crucify the old gentleman on a cross of gold or would it pity his weakness and tell him to go and sin some more. Five judges took the merciful view, while four were for crucifixion—and Uncle Sam's narrow escape certainly made him shake for a time. Incidentally the court's decision saves Canadian governments, provincial and federal millions of dollars, the difference between paying in gold or otherwise.

The waterpipe in the bathroom had burst. The head of the house was doing his best to stem the flowing tide with his hands, pending the arrival of a plumber. Suddenly the son burst into the bathroom and said excitedly, "You can take your hand off that leak now, dad!"

"Thank goodness!" exclaimed his father. "Is the plumber here at last?"

"No," was the reply. "The house is on fire!".

HOUSING PROGRAM BY GOV'T ASKED

Hon. H. Stevens Speaks Before Lumberman's Association

Toronto, Feb. 21 (CP)—Failing action by executives of mortgage, trust and loan corporations, the Federal government should create its own corporation to finance a nationwide housing programme, Hon. H. H. Stevens, former Minister of Trade and Commerce and chairman of the Price Spreads Commission, told the Ontario Retail Lumbermen's Association today.

By the sale of bonds and if necessary, by guaranteeing them, such a government-controlled body would do for the people "what these at present in control are failing to do, that is, provide decent housing for the people," Mr. Stevens declared in his address last night.

The former cabinet Minister presented figures to indicate the the "amazing" increase in the assets of the mortgage, trust and loan companies during the depression period. He stated there had been a decline of $600,000,000 to $900,000,000 in "normal" building in the past four years, suggested a diversion of such funds from building to other investments.

Andrenalin Used Stimulates Heart Life is Revived

Tyler, Tex., Feb. 21 (CP)— Life that apparently left him for two minutes returned slowly today to 71-year-old W. C. Simmons.

Dr. Howard Bryant who revived the former Smith County Sheriff by injecting adrenalin into a stilled heart after he had folded his pastor's hands in death, said Strang's chances for complete recovery were good.

The patient weakened slightly early today as he lay in an oxygen tent—his watch ticking him—but attendants were hopeful of recovery.

When revived Strang asked for his watch. He has not spoken since.

Dr. Bryant termed Strang's case "extremely rare" said Strang came to his office yesterday complaining of severe coronary occlusion.

"His breathing was difficult—he was unable to speak and I had to diagnose his trouble from examination alone. His pulse was thready and very weak.

"He was placed on an examining table and his head raised to a semi-sitting position. He was given stimulants but his condition became worse. He stopped breathing and his heart stopped.

"I told his wife he was dead and she called the undertaker.

Dr. Bryant said he tied the man's hands together and covered him with a sheet but asked the undertendant to stay with him until the undertaker arrived.

"I went back in a few minutes and decided to try andrenalin," said Dr. Bryant.

"His heart began to beat. He began to breathe. The next thing he was forced into his lungs from a gas machine. His color picked up and soon he appeared to be much better. He apparently had a typical attack of coronary occlusion."

Dr. Bryant was reluctant to discuss the case and would not compare it to a similar case reported recently in England, where a man "died" was revived and told of a vision of the hereafter.

RUSSIA'S FAVORITE OUTDOOR SPORT

Since parachute jumping is the favorite outdoor sport of the youth of the Soviet, in almost every town may be seen towers of this special design, off which young girls and boys hurl themselves as a preliminary training to leaping from aeroplanes. The towers are constructed with platforms placed at intervals up to the top. As the jumper gains in skill the higher he goes until he is jumping from the top. Then comes aeroplane jumping. Here is a young man just after having left the top platform.

Dufferin School Defeats College

Scoring more speed and weight than their opponents, Dufferin Avenue Public School defeated College Street School Tuesday afternoon at the Trenton arena by 3-1. Dufferin had most of the play in the first period but were only able to count once when Anderson beat Pennington in the net. Ostrell evened the count at the outset of the second session, and the teams battled on even terms till the second closed. Both teams missed several scoring chances. Stubbs, Lawson and Ostrell played well for the east-siders while Spier and Ingle were the best on the ice. Ingle put Dufferin ahead on a beautiful end-to-end rush from his own team. The same small package of hockey scored again when he picked up a pass on the side to skate in and beat Pennington. Neither team was able to score after and the game finished 3-1 for Dufferin.

The win gives ten points to Dufferin on the Weddell Cup but College Street had enough College after the annual field day and the basketball to take the cup without the hockey match. The students of each school lined either side of the rink and it was a fine sight from the opening bell until the final gong.

College—Goal, Pennington; defence McMaster and Lawson; centre, Ostrell; wings, Rose and Cleary; subs, Stubbs, Rose, Pearson, Lidster, Brownlee, Ackerman.

Referee—Ted Roberts.

FISHER CONTENDS MISTAKE IS MADE

Claims Reilly Ignored Evidence of The Experts

By PAT McGRADY

New York, Feb. 21—(AP)—A former defence investigator said today counsel for Bruno Hauptmann had ignored evidence the body in the murder case would not have been, that of the Lindbergh baby.

Seven autopsy experts were ready to show, declared George H. Foster, the body found five miles from Hopewell, N.J. and identified by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh as that of his son in reality was.

(1) More than four inches taller than Charles Lindbergh, Jr.

(2) Decomposed more than would have been possible in the mild weather after the kidnapping, and

(3) Embalmed.

Foster is chief investigator for James M. Fawcett, who was replaced as Hauptmann's counsel before the trial.

His assertion came as the present defense staff prepared to gather in Trenton late today for a conference on their disagreement over appeal procedure. This was understood to be due in part to the failure of Edward J. Reilly, chief counsel, to attack the state's identification of the body.

WHERE TWO WOMEN WERE BEHEADED BY NAZIS

In the dimly-lit dark courtyard of the women's prison a Moabit, Berlin, the heads of two of Germany's most beautiful women were severed by Nazi axmen who executed the death sentence for espionage activities against the Nazi regime. The victims were blonde Baroness Benita von Berg, former wife of Baron von Falkenhayn; and Baroness Renate von Metzner. This picture was taken recently during an exercise period in the prison ward. Notice how the matron stands in the centre and watches the prisoners walk slowly around the circular path with hands clasped behind their backs. Two men are now reported for the same fate.

C. G. I. T.

The regular weekly meeting of the C. G. I. T. of the Baptist Church was held Tues. night. The meeting was opened with a duet sung by Miss Helen Smith and Grace Elwood. They sang "Devotion" and "A Beautiful City" and was very much enjoyed by all.

Mr. Grafton, teacher at the local Collegiate Institute was the guest speaker of the evening.

The topic he had chosen for his address was "Bolivia and Bolivians". The address was illustrated by lantern slides.

Many interesting facts about Bolivia were brought forth. Spain and Portugal forged ahead rapidly in the marine world at the beginning of the sixteenth century. Many conflicts arose between the two countries over territories. The Pope finally settled the disputes by drawing an imaginary line between the North and South Poles and giving all the land that lay to the west to Spain and all on the east to Portugal.

Spain, during one of her explorations, found Bolivia. Her primary interest was gold and Bolivia was not found lacking. She has produced approximately $1,000,000,000 worth of gold and at present produces a large quantity of the world's supply of tin.

Bolivia was the last of the South American Republics to secure her freedom from Spain. This she achieved in 1825. The people of Bolivia are mainly of Indians, whites and the Cholos, a cross between the two. Hundreds of years ago the Indians of Bolivia had reached a high state of civilization but this has since been lost. They now live in quite a primitive stage.

During the intermission Mrs. Cleland sang a beautiful number entitled "Tick, Tick Tock". Mr. Gordon was thanked for his splendid and inspiring address by a youthful member of the C. G. I. T.

How Child 'Rates' His Elders

Ethel had to get all dressed up because Uncle Brant was coming. Ethel hated getting dressed up, unless it was for a fancy dress party and that, of course, was a different kind of getting up. And mamma did she hate the kind of grown-ups you had to dress up for.

She had never seen this uncle, but she believed he was some stiff, stuffy old bill-jay, who thought children a pest. Unless they were all dressed up and quiet.

"Don't forget to curtsy," mother reminded.

"Oh, do I have to?" Ethel rebelled. I think I'm too old."

"No, dear, you're not, and I want you to make a good impression upon Uncle Brant."

Couldn't Hide Him

"I don't," Ethel grumbled. I bet he's awful. I know I'm going to hate him."

But Ethel, although she was all prepared to, couldn't hate Uncle Brant. She couldn't, because quite unexpectedly he turned out to be a "real sport"; he passed the test and became within ten minutes Ethel's friend for life—a friend spirit".

At first glance Uncle Brant appeared to realize Ethel's fears, or perhaps expectations. She wore type of girl he usually met. She was old (according to Ethel's standards), stiff, unwilling—reluctant and very pressed.

In answer to a query from mother, a "Yes, Ethel", from father, Ethel approached reluctantly, unwillingly to offer a hand to Uncle Brant, to stand before him and curtsy.

Uncle Good Sport"

Uncle Brant, took the proffered hand, rose unwillingly said and shook it. Ethel was surprised into a sudden smile, and a softening of the heart. Uncle Brant, little, and old, bald, bespectacled, looked so funny curtseying just like a little girl, so solemn he was about it, too. Uncle Brant was all that Ethel considered one of the worst type exterior, was evidently a "good sport", and a darling. He knew curtseying was silly. He was a "kindred spirit", and probably wouldn't have cared if Ethel had dressed up or not.

So Ethel was won. Children are like that, easy problems to do, most of them, but offering a bit of a knack all the same. They forgive so much, and children so little. If you can't be called a "good sport", you're out of luck, that's all. You'll have to begin all over and win your spurs.

Aunt Wins Jimmy

In answer to Aunt Mamie's knock on his door, Jimmy called out a most discourteous, "What do you want" But Aunt Mamie insisted of speaking, answered in an even, soothing voice, "some ripe tomatoes", which so delighted Jimmy that he flung the door wide, beaming a welcome at his aunt. She had the run of the place after that, and a frank acknowledgement of affection and admiration, "You're a peach, Aunt Mamie, you're a good sport".

Parents, aunts, uncles, teachers, are forgiven much, severity, even injustice, weakness, prejudice, exhilaration, in the class room, if after hours he or she will show the proper desire to be good sports in his pedestal, and be a "good sport", that is tenacity, make a fool of himself, be just one of the boys", for a bit.

PLAN TO ASSIST YOUNG FARMERS

Proposer Hopes to Stop Drift From Farms to The City

OTTAWA, Feb. 21.—(CP) — In an effort to arrive at some method of stopping the continual drift of young people from farms to cities the House of Commons Committee on Agriculture will study a proposal to launch a five-year plan of assisting young farmers to settle on new land. The proposal was launched by Joseph Bradette, Liberal member for Timiskaming North, yesterday and Sir George Perley, acting Prime Minister agreed to send it to Committee.

Amplifying his idea Mr. Bradette said he would have the government spend $30,000,000 in the next. five years assisting 5000 farmers' sons to start new farms for themselves in pioneer districts of the country. Thereafter settlement of city unemployed on the land was a matter for some other private body with farmers it would be different. Such young farmer would be allotted $1,000 in five annual payments of $200 all conditional upon his selvating his farm in accord with regulations of supervising officials.

Mr. Bradette based his proposature figures on population. Annual increase in Canada's population was about 130,000 of which 65,000 were born in rural area. Half of these, or 32,500 would be boys. Establishing 2,000 farmers' sons on new farms would practically take care of the increase in farm population.

The whole government reform program—s, including Unemployment Insurance, said Mr. Bradette, was calculated to benefit city dwellers, to make life more comfortable and secure for them. The farmer would be taxed but would get nothing. The legislation would increase the drift from the country to the city.

It was, therefore, time to take steps to encourage farmers' sons to stay on the land and to make things easier for them.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLS

"Wings in the Dark"
New Triumph For Lovely Myrna Loy

A thrilling, dramatic and suspenseful drama which gives motion picture audiences a peek into the lives and works of the heroes of the peacetime skyways, Paramount's "Wings in the Dark" is now on the Bells screen with lovely Myrna Loy and handsome Cary Grant co-starred.

This exciting drama brings aviation up to date and ahead of the times by dealing with innovations in blind flying which have not as yet been perfected. Around this technical problem is woven a love story of struggle and achievement.

The story deals with a young pilot who is an inventor of instruments for blind flying. Aided by a beautiful female stunt pilot, he prepares to set out on a trans-oceanic hop to prove his inventions, but an accident blinds him on the last moment. In this state he conceives the idea of perfecting his instruments so that even in his blind condition he can fly the plane.

Myrna Loy Stars

The climax of the picture, in which he establishes the usefulness of his instruments, is one of the most exciting sequences which has ever been filmed.

This time she gets further from her earlier exotic roles than she has ever been, and proves herself to be a down-to-earth person and a highly capable actress. This adds another finger to her recent successes and helps establish Myrna Loy as one of the best box office bets of this year.

Grant At His Best

Cary Grant is also fortunate in getting his most unusual role to date. His part, as the inventive pilot presented some difficult problems in acting. The fact that he contributed largely to the dramatic thrills of the picture speaks well for his performance. It is without a doubt his most colorful role since "Ruggles and the Hawk" and also an air picture.

A fine roster of supporting players are cast in roles which work closely woven into the main thread of the story. Roscoe Karns as an entertaining press agent contributes an unusually fine piece of acting. While Dean Jagger, Robert Cavanaugh and others are particularly outstanding.

Four Selected Shorts

Four selected and varied short treats will precede the exhibition of the feature attraction and include, Pathe News, Topics of the early riot, "You Said a Hatful", Don Redman's famed Orchestra and Revue, a delightful musical novelty featuring revealing scenes; in and around "York", and "Discontented Canary", a tuneful novelette. With such an excellent program arranged for exhibition today and Friday, matinee and evening, no doubt the popular patrons thereof will be favored with large patronage.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Girl of My Dreams"
Sparkles With Melody, Mirth and Romance

A track meet, and not a football game, as has been the custom in so many motion pictures, is the background of "Girl of My Dreams" now at the Capitol Theatre. So much for the innovation!

Not that this new photoplay needed an innovation to prove its merit in the field of light entertainment. Fresh and snappy from start to finish, its breezy dialogue, rhythmic tunes and clever plot place it in a class by itself, not to mention a cast of such young screen notables as Mary Carlisle, Sterling Holloway, Eddie Nugent, Arthur Lake, Olcl Parrish, Jessie Roberts, Oreigton Chaney and the Crane Wilbur, Henry and Bettymae.

Others who contribute greatly to the success of this triumph include Ted Lewis and his orchestra, who recently completed a successful season at the famous resort at Lake Tahoe, the Three Lieutenants, an entertaining trio composed of Frank McKee, Herbert Hall and Jack Frost, Tommy Dugan, who plays his old role of the taxi driver, Olaf Hytten and George Cleveland.

The story revolves around Gwen Preston, a young co-ed of Rawley College, who refuses to give in to Larry Baxter's plea of love, preferring to fasten her attentions on 'Jon Cooper, girlfriend who is star of the track team. Larry, counted on for firsts in the hurdles in the big meet, and Don also expected to garner two firsts in the shot-put and discus, fall in their first efforts Larry because Gwen won't listen to him and Don because of too much attention on her part.

Just when the cause seems most hopeless, Gwen provides the noble gesture that enable Larry and Don to finish their athletic careers in a blaze of glory and Rawley to win the meet.

This is one of the best college pictures to be seen on the screen for some time.

"The President Vanishes"

A film with an imaginative and thrilling story, yet one that deals vigorously with the problems and ills of today, "The President Vanishes", the picture has the same shrewd and easily understandable gift for political analysis and prophecy as that other great production, "Gabriel Over the White House".

For more than an hour and a quarter this production will cause you to live through more exciting national and international events than could be crowded into a year of newspaper space.

It presents, elaborately, what would happen if another World War broke out in Europe, while profiteers and munitions manufacturers, backed by their millions, employed propaganda to excite the people into such a war!

And IF the President of the United States, fighting desperately to keep his country out of the struggle, disappeared two hours before he was to address a joint session of Congress with a plea for peace, and clues were found indicating that the President had been kidnapped!

However, those events are but incidental ingredients to the story which is, fundamentally, an excellent mystery and a romance; a romance intriguingly executed by Fay Kelly and Peggy Conklin, New York stage player who makes her film debut, that it is retained throughout the production's widespread moments.

Capitol News will be shown each performance. Last Complete Show 8.45.

Kingfish Barnstorming in U.S. For Four Hundred Bucks Nightly

By EDWARD J. NEIL

Daytona Beach, Fla., Feb. 21—(AP)—There are poor old athletes working their haghazard ways around this part of the country, whose ears never stop ringing. If Max Baer isn't popping 'em over it's Tony Shucco and if it isn't Shucco, it's Kingfish Lentnaty.

The Kingfish chotcha, I got penalty) is in town to drill one Jim (Killer) Garfield in Armatrong's warehouse on the other side of the railroad tracks tonight. The Kingfish put the proper aspect on the situation.

"I knocked out five guys since I left Chicago," he says, "a guy named Red Tom in Sarasota, another guy with a beard named Savage in Tampa, a lousy guy named Gus Pappanarino, in one of them Al Brashes, Jack Townzend in Jacksonville and this guy tonight."

The fact, that the guy is fast running out bodies up the Kingfish. They want him in a dozen different hereabouts.

"I'm a C-an-D man", says the Kingfish.

"Five and doughnuts. We get about 400 bucks a night. I just do this to keep unemployment down. don't know what the other guys get. Maybe a pork chop."

The way the Kingfish looks at it, you can't expect much for 400 bucks from a man or his standing.

Then Louis started the Kingfish for another reason.

"It's great stuff. You get educated without trying. I been across rivers I never knew there was. I seen the gulf stream, that's a swell river. I seen coconuts growing. I learn a lot.

"I met Sir Malcolm Campbell and I asked him if he'd ever seen my picture in the papers. He said 'no' so I guess he doesn't read the papers."

WARDEN'S CAR FOUND

Kingston, Ont., Feb. 21 (CP) — The car owned by Warden R. M. Allen of Kingston penitentiary which was stolen Tuesday night, was recovered by police this morning. It was found abandoned in a lane way, only a few blocks away from where it was stolen. The car was undamaged but a supply of gasoline was used up. "Joy riders" are blamed for the theft of the car.

PARENTS SEEK SON

Toronto, Feb. 21 (CP)—Parents of Edward Lloyd, 15, of Toronto have asked police to try to locate their son, missing since Feb. 15 and believed headed for the border. The lad with two school chums hitchhiked to Galt but the other two returned to their homes.

Consul Franklin C. Gowen of the U.S. Consulate, in London took charge of the case on behalf of the United States while preparations were made for an inquest here probably next week. The girls' father is coming from Naples.

The plane they dropped from belonged to the Hillman Air Service. The pilot apparently flew on for an hour after the girls fell to their deaths without knowing the fate of his two passengers.

Out over the English Channel he looked back into the cabin, saw the girls were missing and a door was ajar.

Notified Airport

He immediately notified Croydon of the passengers disappearance, then circled back to the Hillman's landing field at Romford Airdrome.

The death plunge was witnessed by a group of workmen who glanced up in time to see the sprawl of the plane motor's roar. They saw two objects hurtling down to the ground.

Remembering the recent loss of her gold from a Hillman Air Service flying from Paris to England the group rushed to the spot expecting to find strongboxes. Instead the men were horrified to see the bodies of the two girls.

They were the only passengers in the plane which, in addition, carried only 40 pounds of baggage.

The pilot was J. Kirton.

It was believed the distance of the fall was about 1,500 feet, for that is the normal altitude of the Hillman planes when they cross over Upminster.

A shattered wrist watch engraved with the initials "J. D." was found near the bodies. They were embedded one foot into the ground.

Pilot Kirton was the same man who was flying the London-bound plane in January which spilled $110,000 worth of gold bars out on the French coast. The gold was found subsequently by searchers.

Excellent Pilot

An official of the Hillman lines said Kirton was an excellent pilot and has a distinguished record for negotiating rough-weather Channel crossings.

Aviation circles are still debating the mystery of the death of Capt. Alfred Loewenstein, international-known Belgian financier, who disappeared July 4, 1928, from a passenger plane crossing the English Channel.

Investigation failed to disclose what how Loewenstein could have opened the door of the plane while it was in flight. Experts at that time said that a sudden gust would have been unable to open the passenger door against the suction from the propeller.

Yet, Captain Loewenstein disappeared without a trace and nothing more was heard from him.

FINANCIAL MARKETS
NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 21 (AP)—Conflicting movements persisted in the Financial Markets today and speculative forces exhibited more than the usual amount of caution.

Among Canadian stocks, shares of Dome, McIntyre, International Nickel and Canadian Pacific were unchanged to small fractions higher. On the curb, Lake Shore advanced slightly. Dominion Government Bonds ruled narrow. Canadian funds held at yesterday's close at 100.00 cents.

Among gainers of fractions to a point or more were American Safety Razor, Mesta Machine, Evans Products, Briggs Manufacturing, Liggett and Myers "B", American Telephone, North American, U. S. Smelting, American Smelting and Cerro de Pasco. A major fractional advance was scored by Loew's.

The Baldwin Locomotive stocks had another sinking spell, the Preferred losing 5 points and the Common yielded a point or so. American Locomotive Common fell nearly 2, as did U.S. Steel Preferred.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 21.—(CP)—Stimulating news was far from plentiful for market guidance today and the Industrial section developed a few soft spots though the general tendency was to hold steady. Volume was decidedly small apart from the fair trade in Nickel, Brazilian, Ford A and some of the oils and liquors.

International Nickel was helped by the announcement that the company was expanding operations and it sold higher. Brazilian, Ford A and C.P.R. were unchanged this afternoon. Walkers common eased down 1-4 and the other liquor shares remained unchanged.

The gold clause rally in the early part of the week has brought in its wake the usual dribble of profit-taking and this factor has chased buyers to the side lines.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 21.—(CP) — The Mining Department of the Toronto Exchange turned definitely weak today and recessions were general over the Board. A few exceptions were McWatters, Sullivan, Prospectors Airways, Buffalo-Ankerite and Siscoe, these selling higher on good volume.

McWatters was pushed up to 1.22 on heavy trading and was holding at 1.18 this afternoon for a net gain of seven cents. Sullivan was up 4 and the others 1 about the same net advances. McMillan dropped 6 to 29.

Senior Golds held well with the exception of Bralorne which sold down to 9.75 and then recovered to $10 for a loss of 50 cents. Lake Shore and Hollinger were strong.

Base Metal and Silver issues were slow and mainly steady. Eldorado had a small advance in the early afternoon and Base Metals Corporation was offered down to 55, off 3 cents.

GARAGE-OWNER TESTIFIES

The garage owner said on the steering wheel of the car he saw the letters "Ver" and "yea". When the car was called for on October 6 the owner asked him to destroy records of it being there.

Signatures were examined by Arthur Black Farmer, noted graphologist at the resumed Vermilyea murder trial here Thursday morning, Farmer being the first witness. He was examined by Crown Prosecutor Urquhart.

Q. You are a graduate of a Canadian university? A. Yes, of McMaster.

Q. Have you been engaged in study of hand writing? A. Yes, for 29 years.

Q. Have you been called in comparisons of handwriting in the courts of Canada? A. Yes, I have testified for many years.

At this point Mr. Urquhart showed several exhibits of handwriting on single sheets of paper and a telegram.

Q. I produce two hotel registers, one of the Walker House and I draw your attention to the signature, B. F. Carter.

A. I have examined this and find it is the same as several of the other exhibits.

Identifies Handwriting

Q. I have another page here with the signature of Mr. Corsons. How does that compare with the other? A. I would say it was the same as the previous exhibits.

Mr. Urquhart handed several letters and documents to Mr. Farmer. Going over them, witness said that his opinion was, that they were signed by the genuine signature of H. W. Vermilyea.

Q. I produce these insurance documents, would you examine the signature? A. There are many points of similarity between certain letters of the signature and the genuine signature of H. W. Vermilyea.

Col. Greer took over the witness

Q. I suppose it requires some time to come to some conclusion regarding these signatures. A. It requires a great deal of labor and time to assure myself of this. It is not possible to recognize a signature at a glance, I am not that kind of an expert.

Q. The Commercial Hotel of Hamilton had signature of B. Corsons. Did you notice that? A. Yes.

Q. The signature of B. Carter of the Walker House. Is there a similarity? A. Yes.

Q. The signatures on the insurance papers are his natural signature? A. Yes with the exception that he does not generally sign his name as Harold W. Vermilyea.

Q. Is there any other difference? A. He writes the "W" somewhat differently when he writes the "Harold" with his name than he does when he signs with just "H. W."

Accused's Estate

Mr. Urquhart read from a list of depositions taken at an inquiry Commission in California the testimony of O. O. Boyd, real estate dealer, whose declarations told of a real estate deal which accused had attempted to make. The man, witness said, had been always normal. Mr. G. Smith, defence attorney, from records of the examination made in California produced evidence to show that accused's property had been lien free and taxes paid up.

Sale of Lots Failure

A Mr. Harold Caldwell, auctioneer of California, next witness who gave testimony at the Ontario, California, hearing before the Commission told of Mr. Vermilyea calling him on August 10th., asking him to hold an auction of sub-divided lots of the estate on August 30th. The sale, however, had proven a failure and the lots were not offered. Witness, according to testimony, said that Vermilyea needed money.

The cross-examination made by Mr. King was read by Defence Counsel Smith. According to the testimony, the navel orange trees on the estate were 20 to 25 years old. Witness said he had never had close dealings with Vermilyea.

Small Note Renewed

The next witness, Chester A. Warren of Ontario, California, a banker, testified at the hearing, that Vermilyea on September 15, 1934, had asked if witness could renew a small note—that he (accused) had been expecting money from the estate. The note, for a sum of fifty dollars or so—had been renewed. The cross examination of witness, taken by Mr. King adduced that Vermilyea had spoken to him only for a few moments at intervals on business matters only. A statement was that Vermilyea had owned $2,500 in stock in a safety deposit box, but that this stock had not been worth the price quoted.

Edgar B. Decker, secretary-manager of the Clermont Building and Loan Association of California told in his deposition that Vermilyea had asked for a loan on the property on September 8, 1934. Witness had then appraised the property of Vermilyea and a loan of $1,000 was made on September 12. Vermilyea had said according to the deposition that the money was needed for living expenses and to assist his daughter at school. Further questioning revealed that a larger loan would have been given if asked for.

Garage Check

The testimony was read of Alphonse Fontaine, owner of the Gladys Ave., garage, Los Angeles, where a red colored coupe with licence number 4PB-855 which had been parked in the garage was taken out on October 6, and a check had been given. At this point the jury retired while counsel argued over the admissibility of a garage ledger sheet as evidence. Defence Counsel had objected to it previously.

"Fontaine had said, 'I tore it out of my book'," explained Col. Greer, objecting to the court against the presentation of a copy of the page in question. It was argued that the original should have been produced. Crown did not press the point, and the copy was not allowed by the court as evidence.. At this point, several photographs which were expected to be used as evidence were submitted by Mr. Urquhart to defence attorneys. These were not objected to. The photographs were were those of accused while held in custody at Los Angeles. Mr. Jeffrey scrutinized them closely. Later an objection was raised that there was not witness competent to swear to the identification of the pictures.

Letters on Steering Wheel

With the return of the jury, Mr. Urquhart proceeded with the reading of the commission testimony. Several pages of the report were devoted to the routine questioning of Fontaine regarding the manner of checking stored machines and registration. Check 990 had been given out on the Buick coupe stored. Witness, (the garage owner), said that he had sat in the car once and noted a name "V-E-R" and then "Y-E-A" on the steering wheel. The owner of the machine called on October 6, and claimed the machine.

Asked to Destroy Car Record

Then the car owner said, according to the deposition: "I have a peculiar request to make. I want to ask you to destroy the records of this car being here. I was supposed to have been using this car during the time it was here," in the deposition of the garage owner. It was further added that the entries of the registration had been scratched out, once by the owner of the machine who seized an eraser and rubbed out marks on a page of the ledger. "This is an unusual request but we sometimes get them," said the witness at the commission.

Throughout the reading of this testimony there were frequent interruptions by both Mr. Jeffrey and defence counsel who sought to ascertain original points of proof in the document, and to clear up some legal point.

Car in Garage

It was definitely ascertained that the car in question had been parked in storage from Sept. 25 to Oct. 6.

"The Man or His Twin"

After the machine had been called for, the sheriff, said witness, had called, with a request for information on the car and the owner. He had given this information and later identified photographs of the accused. "This is the man unless he has a twin brother," said the garage owner when shown them.

The pictures of accused were produced in court.

There had been no cross-examination of this witness at the commission.

Talk With "Collins"

Howard Strickling, a director of publicity for a Culver City motion picture firm connected with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Motion Picture Corporation, testified before the commission that on the night of October 5 he had travelled in a T.W.A. plane toward Los Angeles and had engaged in conversation with a passenger named "Collins." This name had been given the copilot of the plane at the time. Witness identified pictures of accused man as the one who had been in the plane on the night of October 5.

"Nervous Passenger" Identified

Wm. Joseph Callaghan, Sonora Avenue, Glendale, a limousine operator, told at the commission of calling for the passengers of the plane at the airport and of collecting a load of passengers. A "nervous passenger," he said, had been anxious to get away from the port. He later transferred to another car when witness' own was too slow in getting away, but then got out and got in the first car again. Witness then drove him to a Glendale hotel, chatting freely with him all the way. From a bundle of pictures later shown witness identified the accused as his nervous and talkative passenger.

Pauses in Reading

Frequent pauses in the part of proceedings characterized the morning session of court, as the Hon. Justice Jeffrey time and again halted the reading of the testimony given at the commission. Defence counsel, also on the qui vive for uncertain points was quick to raise objections. In the midst of one legal tangle the jury, appearing slightly wearied by the tiring testimony was given recess by the court.

Part of Testimony Admitted

Mr. Urquhart referred again to the commission testimony with the resumption of court following recess. In regard to the testimony of Fontaine, the garage owner, the defence objected to its admissibility as evidence and it was allowed only in part.

Inspector Hamar Gardner, recalled to the stand told of his investigation at the garage and of receiving a card (identified) from the owner. The card, a claim check, had been given the owner of the car and appeared according to witness to have an erasure of some figures or lettering. The words "for two weeks" pointed out Mr. Urquhart, appeared to have been crossed out.

Also received by witness was a page from a record book and identified. It contained an entry —No. 990—of the date and time, Oct. 6th., and also contained what appeared to be an erasure of the make of car and license number. Justice Jeffrey examined the page closely. The license number of this machine had not been inserted in the column, wherein the numbers of other cars had been entered. Inspector Gardner, upon the instructions of the court, stepped down from the stand and with sheet in hand pointed out to the jury the various listings on the sheet. The claim check was also passed from hand to hand in the jury. Each man closely and carefully scrutinized the sheet and check.

Speaks of Erasure

Question by Justice Jeffrey:—"You say that in this column, designated for Sept. 25, 1934, there had been something written and then erased?"

A.—Yes, my lord.

Mr. Urquhart taking the witness produced several photographs. These were identified by the Inspector as those of accused. The exhibits were handed the jurors and closely examined. One picture labelled accused with a police number on a sign—"1200".

Col. Greer took the chief of police as witness and through close questioning again had him identify the picture exhibits.

Police Blotter Record

Q.—You have a police blotter on which all stored cars must be entered?

A.—Not all garages have—there is I understand a bylaw in this respect.

A.—Yes. Witness added that the book was much like a hotel register.

Q.—Is the garage owner compelled to make a return to the police? A.—Not to my knowledge.

Q.—But he is expected to make a careful record?

Witness nodded.

Q.—This is not an actual police record, however? A.—Just merely to assist police, I would say.

Col. Greer paused reflectively and then took up the record book of the California inquiry commission. After considerable search he unearthed a series of questions regarding photographs of the accused. This was followed by the question to the court whether or not they could all be introduced as actual evidence. In answer to another question witness replied that all of the pictures were taken after the arrest of the accused.

Crown Rests

With the dismissal of the last witness at 12.45 a.m. the Crown, concluding its presentation of evidence, rested its case.

REVIEW BOARD LOOKS OVER CASES DEBTOR FARMER

Justice Hope Explains Purpose of Dominion Legislation

11 CASES CONSIDERED

Attempt to Keep Good Farm Producers on Land Noted

The Farm Board of Review was in session at the Shire Hall today, the court being composed of the Hon. Mr. Justice J. A. Hope, chairman, Lt. Col. B. M. Green, Duncan Sinclair, Commissioner and J. R. Rumball, registrar.

Mr. Justice Hope explained that the purpose of the Dominion Legislation under which the board functions, is to retain the farmers on the land if they are efficient producers. He pointed out that the legislation assumes that many farmers are unable to meet their indebtedness and probably never will be able to pay up under the existing set-up.

However, he noted, if the board is convinced that a farmer is not an efficient producer, it will decide that it is useless to keep him on the land. Each is being dealt with on its merits and no case will be held as a precedent in the disposition of any other case, he stated.

Rights of Contracts

"Regarding secured creditors," he added, "the board feels that the rights of contracts must to a great extent be preserved. It must be seen what a disastrous effect it would have on farming communities if contracts were set aside rashly.

"That might be said to be general confiscation in favour of the farmers. Then they would be able to obtain mortgage loans in future. So, in the interest of the farmers themselves consideration must be given to securities."

There were eleven cases of farmers' indebtedness to be considered Each case in this court is dealt with separately and in camera. Mortgages and loans were the chief sources of discussions.

It was obvious from the number of persons attending before the commission that the debtor farmers are receiving material assistance.

The district covered in this case is between Kingston and Brighton. There are no cases of farmers listed as of Belleville postal area, though there are names of some at some distance from the city.

At the opening of the commission's proceedings here, Mr. A. B. Collins, K.C., extended a welcome to Belleville to Mr. Justice Hope, this being his first appearance here.

Race News Bill Has Been Abandoned

Toronto, Feb. 21 (CP)—J. J. Glass, M.L.A. for Toronto St. Andrews, said today he had abandoned his plan to introduce in the Legislature a bill to prohibit publication of advance race news concerning all tracks operating outside of Ontario.

"When I announced my intention the power of the Ontario Legislature to deal with the matter was challenged and I referred the bill to the Provincial Legal Department," he stated. "The department holds the matter is Federal and beyond the jurisdiction of the Legislature."

ERNEST BROUGH DIES AT PICTON

After an illness of some years, during which he bore his suffering with extreme patience Ernest Carleton Brough passed away at his home, Main St. West, on Monday, Feb. 18th, in his fifty-sixth year. The deceased was born in Hallowell Township, a son of Darius Brough and his wife, Aleda Potter. For many years he was employed in the Seed House at Picton, until failing health forced his retirement. He is survived by his widow and a young family. One brother, John Brough, and a sister, Mrs. Armenia Ackerman, of Picton, also survives. The deceased was a member of the United Church, and the funeral service will be held at his late residence on Thursday afternoon, at half-past two. Rev. David Wren, assisted by Rev. S. M. At the residence of her sister, Mrs. Royal Church, with whom she had lived for the past year, Miss Hester Hodgin passed to her last rest on Saturday, February 16th. The deceased was born in South Marysburgh, and had spent many years in Picton. The funeral service was held at the residence of her sister, Mrs. Church, on Monday afternoon.

The local meeting scheduled for last Friday evening, Feb. 19th, was postponed until a later date, owing to the absence of the secretary, Mr. Norman Mallett.

About sixty couples enjoyed dancing in the Oddfellows' Hall on Monday evening, when a dance was sponsored by St. Gregory's Church. There were many novelty dances. The spot dance prize was awarded to Miss Helen McDougall, and the prize for the Lancers of Belleville, played an enjoyable dance programme.

On Tuesday, Feb. 19th, Rev. D. Wren, Mr. M. Hicks and Mr. Stanley Scott, of Picton, attended the district Presbyterian meeting held at the Presbytery of Belleville building, Church, Rev. Mr. Wren delivered a splendid address on "The Unrecognized Deficiency."

An especially large congregation gathered at the United Church for the evening service on Sunday last when a musical program was particularly enjoyed on this occasion, when a junior choir of sixty voices in the choir loft, and the senior choir, in the gallery, rendered anthems and singing. Messrs. Ward, Walden, Collings, and Van Dusen, in male quartette sang "Showers of Blessing." The sermon, "The Greatest Question in the World," by Mr. Wren, was very inspiring.

Brighton, England, Feb. 20 (AP)—A coroner's jury today wrote an official "link" on "Brighton's latest crime No. 1" by returning an open verdict on one of England's most baffling murder mysteries.

The jury found it was unable to reach any conclusion on the death of the woman whose torso was found last June in a trunk at the Brighton railway station.

A host of star investigators told the jury they had failed to determine how, when or where the woman met her death and were not even able to identify her.

Clear Thinking Urgently Needed Says Dr. Thomas

"There is a mist over our landscape of thinking" said Dr. Ernest Thomas to members of the Kiwanis Club, who turned out in force at the weekly luncheon on Tuesday to hear this brilliant speaker on the trend of the times and his ideas of corrective measures. The members of the club, if employees brought their employers and if an employer was accompanied, by an employee and it was one of the best meetings held during the year. Cliff Barrager as president presided and Wade Winkle led in the singing while George Lee collected the several fines.

A roll call of the members and their guests showed, that nearly every member of the club was present and Joe Imlah welcomed the guests, hoping they would come back again not as guests but as members of this live organization. Dr. Dick Flynn in the absence of Jack Aylesworth, who is at present serving on the jury at the Supreme Court stated, that the visit to the hospital would be made next Tuesday after the the luncheon and requested, that magazines, candies, cigars and cigarettes be brought at that time.

Two New Members

Again two new members were introduced and initiated into the club, Harold Seldon and Harry Pyre being the new entrants. They were introduced to the club by Eddie Shapiro and Eddie Logan, while the President gave the children's part of the address. Dr. Albert ceremony, the new members were introduced personally to each member. Gordon Bray, one of the latest acquisitions to the club was the founder of the club and each three minute talk on life insurance was partially well given, a number of facts about this great financial structure being an eye opener to the majority of the members. He stated there was nine and one half billion dollars worth of insurance in force in Canada and that insurance provides means for protective saving and a specific fund for a specific purpose. He stated all companies are scientifically sound and not a single company had defaulted and that every claim had been paid on time. The prizes given by Gordon were won by Harold Cross and Dr. Walter Morgan. Dates will be provided for the band concert on Sunday next and the Belleville band. the collection received being used for the purchase of new instruments.

Clear Thinking Needed

The speaker of the day was introduced by Rev. Dr. Semple and Wrenshall, who is at present in charge of the Canadian Legion, expressed by George Lee. It was necessary for Dr. Thomas to speak before the club as he was conducting owing to a previous engagement. Dr. Thomas is a very forceful speaker with a dynamic mind and his ideas of curing the economic problems are much advanced from the theories propounded by other speakers of the day. He first declared, that there were few clear thinkers or creative thinkers at the present time and that the need profound changes of thinking in the fundamentals. The conception of government has been revolutionized" said Dr. Thomas and then proceeded to outline his statement. Those of the 19th century thought that the state had the right to control the whole world but that is far from true in this age. He explained, that in the general election in Britain in 1880, the government's became concerned with the health of the people and many funny cartoons were published but yet the Minister of Health in any government is one of the most important posts in the ministry. The speaker stated, that freedom depended on authority and that you could not have freedom without order. Dr. Thomas took a rap at Parliaments generally stating that things going on in Parliament had been accomplished by the people and he advised all not to pay too much attention to Parliament.

Four kinds of freedom were annunciated, Political freedom, National Freedom, Industrial freedom, Political freedom and economic freedom and the latter does not exist. "International relations today are on powers, economic and forces, which govern the world will have to come out to the open. The speaker explained the workings of fascism in Italy, stating it was a corporative sate with the individual having no existence in the law but Italy does not ask any country to adopt their system. He also explained the system under which President Roosevelt was working and then showed the system under which Canada was governed. "We have better than 240 constituents, that come into being in the morning of election and go out at night, when the white slips of paper are counted", said the speaker.

In closing the speaker stated, that from 1920 to 1930 would be the most momentous period in the world's history and the next fifteen years would determine that period.

MEMORIES OF OLD TOWN RECALLED

In writing to the Ontario Intelligencer regarding a business matter, Mr. Thomas Foley, an old Belleville boy, now a resident of Kamsack, Sask., says that although 27 years have passed since he left here he still entertains many pleasant memories of "the old home town". He refers especially to the happy days spent on the bay, at the armouries and in attending the meetings of Moira Lodge No. 11, A. F. & A. M. during the time he lived in Belleville. Mr. Foley was engaged in a store of Wallbridge and Clarke and was an active and enthusiastic member of the 15th. Batt. Rifles.

"Tom" Foley was popular with many friends in Belleville, who will be pleased to hear of him.

CAR LEAVES ROAD ONE MAN KILLED

Party of Three Returning From Hockey Match at Chatham

Chatham, Ont., Feb. 20 (CP)—One man was killed and two injured early today when a light delivery truck left the highway seven miles east of Chatham, near Louisville, and crashed into a telephone pole. All were residents of Alvinston, returning from a hockey game.

Clayton J. Wheeler, 22, was almost instantly killed, Arthur Bain, 51, and J. D. Campbell, 23, suffered lacerations.

The injured men said they believed Wheeler, driving the truck, fell asleep. The car left the road on the left side near one pole and crashed into the next.

Wheeler lived only a few minutes after the crash. He was dead when Dr. J. R. M. Martin of Chatham arrived. Wheeler had suffered a fractured skull a gash across the forehead and a broken arm. He was thrown clear of the car, wheel still straddling the pole.

Bain was bruised and cut about the face and suffered a slight concussion. Campbell's injuries were a gash over the eye and a cut hand. They were taken to St. Joseph's Hospital, Chatham.

The cab was smashed off the truck when it struck the pole. The three men were the only ones in the car. Another Alvinston party, including J. C. McLaughlin, Neil Pratt, Cecil Dolbear, Harold Annett and George Bindner, came upon the wreck about 10 minutes later. They called Dr. Martin, who called Traffic Officer R. J. Clark, coroner of the County of Chatham was summoned.

McLaughlin, Dolbear and Bindner were members of the Alvinston hockey team which played a game with Dorset Athletic Club in Dorset Arena. Pratt and Annett were supporters of the team.

Mr. Wheeler, proprietor of a chopping mill at Alvinston, was a hockey enthusiast. Surviving are his widow; two children, Glen 15, and Lloyd 14, and his mother, who lives in Alvinston.

Rednerseville Notes

The Girl Guides of Rednerseville held a splendid social hour, after the regular meeting on Monday night, "At Fair Haven Cottage," in the form of St. Valentine party, when very pleasant greetings were being exchanged. A short competition on how St. Valentine's Day came into existence, showed good work by the junior girls. A broadcast program was next called, and was well responded to by songs, recitations and instrumental numbements. Mrs. William Hall assisted in serving the lunch.

Mr. Hall was delighted with the gift of a pair of skates and gave a very helpful talk, which was much appreciated, as was the donation toward their future objects.

The meeting was closed with the singing of Taps and the Maple Benediction.

Mr. and Mrs. John Kelchepaw, of Demorestville, are spending a few days the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Simpson.

One of the nice little events at Albury was the observance of the wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dempsey, who entertained the immediate members of their family and a few friends at dinner on Tuesday evening. The spacious rooms were gay with their bright decorations of spring flowers and coupled with the jolly and genial host and hostess, it seemed just the ideal place for a wedding and an anniversary. The humorous accounting of their wedding trip to Toronto, as told by the groom, and the hand-made tucks of the trousers and the unique travelling suit, by the bride, made an amusing and pretty picture, which stood in sharp contrast with today's conveniences. The unusually lovely gifts presented showed the high esteem in which they are held. Their host of friends and neighbors join in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Dempsey many, many happy returns of the anniversary of their wedding day.

G. O. Johnson, M.C. Tells of Work Done by Air Service

TRENTON, Feb. 20.—(Special)—Members of the Rotary Club were hosts to Wing-Commander G. O. Johnson M.C. and the officers of the Trenton base of the Royal Canadian Air Force and many guests representing the business and professional life of the town, at the Trenton Barracks this evening.

President Jack Garrett of the Rotary Club presided over the entire gathering in his capable manner. The dining room was fittingly decorated with the air force colours with tiny models of aeroplanes suspended from the ceiling, "Rotary" greeted welcomed the guests. Wing-Commander and called upon Past President Ed. Enoch to introduce the Commanding Officer and his officers to the others. The officers present were Squadron-Leader R. S. Grandy, O.B.E., Flight-Lieutenants Hanley, Harper, Dickson, VanVliet, Lewis, Flying-Officers Peel, Greenwood, Carr-Harris, Stone and Muir. Past-President Ralph Bonisteel welcomed the guests including Major Harry Cry and members of the Council. Mr. J. Newton, president of the Chamber of Commerce and Mayor Cory both expressed their delight in being present at such a representative gathering.

Past President W. Shannon introduced Wing-Commander Johnston and in his remarks he referred to some of the outstanding feats in aerial life. He was decorated by the Military Cross and the French Croix de Guerre. For many years he commanded the R.C.A.F. base at Winnipeg and later was Senior Staff Officer at Camp headquarters. He had made many notable flights including a flight to Egypt and a flight into the Arctic. Wing-Commander Johnson is also a grandnephew of the R.A.F. Staff Colonel.

In reply the distinguished visitor thanked everyone for their marvellous reception. He then himself and his officers of the air station. His theme as his topic "Activities of the Air Force Station". The air force he said was divided into four sections, namely training, technical training, service operations and civil government operations. He briefly outlined the activities of the last section during 1934.

Outlined Work

He took each of the four stations separately, starting with Dartmouth, N.S. The air force at that station was engaged in spotting the icebergs and informing the pilots. They were useful in that photographed by the air force. From the Winnipeg base came the same work was carried on. The North West Territories were almost entirely developed by the air force. The work was carried on as far north as Great Bear and Great Slave lakes. Air mail lines now follow routes that were pioneered by the air force. The Vancouver station photographed the Queen Charlotte Islands for the Geographical department to bring their maps up to standard. Forestry patrol was another piece of work that was pioneered by the members of the air force. The speaker said he could spend hours in relating the various important work that had been and had engaged in since the war in the development of the Dominion. Over 700,000 negatives are on record at Ottawa, these have been taken by air force. The entire recourse was most interesting and educational.

Past President Art Gulliver and Vice-President Jerry Squier extended a vote of thanks on behalf of the Rotary Club for the fine address. Best wishes were also conveyed to Flight-Lieut. Lewis and Flight-Lieut. Sharpe M. C. who leave shortly for England, where they will take additional courses.

Trenton, N.J, Feb. 20.—(AP)—The rift in the ranks of Bruno Hauptmann's defence has been healed today as Albert Rosecrans, associate counsel, announced he would continue his appearance in the Lindbergh baby kidnap case.

Open dissension flared earlier when, frankly scoring Reilly, C. Lloyd Fisher and Frederick A. Pope went into action to place Hauptmann's appeal before the Court of Errors and Appeals.

After a conference at the state prison attended by Fisher, Rosecrans, a representative of Reilly, and Mrs. Hauptmann, Pope said a reassure agreement had been reached to continue the association of counsel until the appellate action is ended.

Hauptmann's wife will be prolonged at least seven months if the appeal preparations are not completed before the Court of Errors and Appeals, highest in the state, fills its calendar for the May term.

$2,700 PENSION IS SUSPENDED

Premier Hepburn Announces Action by Ontario Government

Toronto, Feb. 20.—(CP)— Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn announced today the Ontario Government had suspended the $2,700 annual pension granted to George S. Lee, former chairman of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway Commission.

When Mr. Lee was deposed as chairman, the commission awarded him this pension but when Mr. Hepburn was in North Bay last month he said he, discovered Mr. Lee was also drawing an annual pension of $2,000 from civil service superannuation fund.

SCIENCE OF SEEING IS FULLY EXPLAINED

Demonstrations Under Auspices of Belleville Hydro

In the Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School Auditorium Tuesday evening motion pictures, demonstrations and talks on the "Science of Seeing" were given under the auspices of the Belleville Hydro Electric System and the audience greatly enjoyed the evening and received much valuable information from what was seen and heard.

Mr. George A. Reid, a member of the Belleville Hydro Commission, in the absence of Mr. Morley Huff, the Chairman of the Board, welcomed the audience and Mr. H. Scott, Manager of the Belleville Hydro Electric System, made a few brief remarks telling the audience a few of the things they were to see and hear and introduced Mr. Wm. Dickson of Toronto, who is a representative of the Ward-Pedlingtone Company, and Mr. George Cousins of the Hydro Electric Commission, Toronto, who was in charge of the equipment used in the demonstrations. Mr. Cousins who is an electrical engineer is constantly engaged in dealing with lighting problems which are encountered by individuals and large business concerns and for solving of which a free service is maintained by the Hydro Commission.

The great injury done to the eyes by inadequate light in reading or working is constantly demonstrated and the proper amount of light required was shown by lights of different power. The glare of lights and the number of lamps required to give the right lighting with views of living rooms in which members of a household were engaged in reading and other pursuits showing the marked transformation brought about by the introducing of sufficient light and properly placed lamps. Eye strain causes mental and bodily fatigue and it was shown beyond any reason for doubt that it is the wise for all people to light their homes for "Seeing" rather than for "Saving".

The usual business was transacted, with Rev. Father J. E. Neary, parish priest, present. A most entertaining and delightful program was presented. A most interesting paper on "Her Overcoming" and "Light in the Home" was given by Miss Mabel McCarthy in her usual clever manner. Piano solos were very ably rendered by Mrs. Dan Stimpson, of Marmora, also by Mrs. R. Shannon, of Deloro. After the program euchre and bridge were played for a while, there being four tables of bridge and two of euchre. Miss Lois Reid held the highest score at bridge, with Mrs. Donald Hutchison second. A very lovely luncheon was served by the hostess, which brought the meeting to a close.

Marsport A.Y.P.A. Entertains

The hall was very artistically decorated for the occasion. Special mention might be made of the several A.Y.P.A. crests which were crowdy drawn and colored by Herbert Herman, a member of St. Paul's A.Y.P.A. which showed a mark of talent.

The guests of the evening were welcomed by the Rev. A. B. Caldwell, assisted by the president, Miss Gertrude Lumsden. Rev. A. S. McConnell, of Stirling, in a few well-chosen words expressed appreciation and honor in being entertained by St. Paul's A.Y.P.A. Mr. Norman Smith was entrusted with the program. An orchestra composed of Messrs. H. Herman, R. Knorr, W. Barr and Harold Augur, assisted by Mrs. J. Noonan, of Campbellford, rendered most enjoyable music.

Fred Herman gave a recitation, "The Whole of Him," Gertrude and Gordon Stewart, of Deloro, gave a duet "When I'm Calling You." Observation Hill." This was followed by another vocal solo by Harold Auger, so his first accompaniment on guitar and mouth organ. The Little Stars' Male Quartet, "Made For Me."

The next play was well presented by a group of young people from Deloro, "A Perplexing Situation." Miss Shirley Hall was the star of the play, and in gratitude for appreciation for her efforts during the cast presented her with a beautiful bouquet. Following the play Miss Flora Stephenson played "The Last Waltz." Dancing then enjoyed for a couple of hours, after which refreshments were served.

French-Manufactured Hotchkiss Guns are Sold to Both Participants in Conflict; Armies and Rebel Troops are Purchasers

One of the many revelations of the machinations and intrigue of armament manufacturers that may be revealed in the arms' inquiry to be conducted by the British government, is the use of the Hotchkiss machine gun by many armies of the world. In the above layout, for instance, Hotchkiss machine guns are shown in the hands of Chinese soldiers (UPPER LEFT), who used them against the Japanese at Shanghai recently. The Japs, however, used the same gun (CENTRE) against the Chinese, Spanish troops (UPPER RIGHT) are well-versed in Hotchkiss mechanism, while in Abyssinia, where the Ethiopians and Italy are quarrelling, Emperor Haile Selassie is seen inspecting a Hotchkiss (LEFT) CENTRE). American used the Hotchkiss gun during the great war, and picture at (LOWER LEFT) shows a test being made. RIGHT: Mexican rebels with Hotchkiss guns for use against government soldiers. Hotchkiss arms are made near Paris, France, though the originator of the firm and inventor of the gun is an American.

Mrs. Miles Smith

The gloom of death was again cast over the town of Madoc on Wednesday morning when it became known that Mrs. Miles Smith had passed away at her home about midnight Tuesday at the early age of 52 years and three months.

Mrs. Smith had been in declining health for some time and suffered much. She was very resigned and patient in all her suffering and was always looking forward to being spared to care for her two children, who were bereft of a father and needed a mother's care.

Mrs. Smith was of a very kind and cheerful disposition and was ever ready to help in time of need. Deceased was born in Huntingdon Township and was the daughter of Mr. Sylvester Reid and late Mrs. Reid, who predeceased her when quite young. About 20 years ago she was united in marriage to Miles Smith, of Madoc, Ont., and became residents of Madoc. To this union were born two children, Roy and Gladys, who are left to mourn the loss of a loving mother and have the sympathy of the community in their sore bereavement. She also leaves to mourn her loss an aged father, one brother, four half brothers and three half sisters, to whom the community extend their sympathy.

The funeral took place from her home on Friday to the Standard Church. Rev. Jas. Smith conducted the service. Interment was made in Lakeview cemetery. Messrs Frank Beslin, Wesley Beslin, Bam Dan-ford, John Hoover, Robert Devolin and Stanley Devolin acted as pallbearers.

A gold wedding was solemnized at Trinity United Church parsonage on the morning of February 19th, when Cesca Vilneff, of Madoc, was united in marriage to William Cejo Devolin, of Madoc Township, by the Rev. G. W. Rivers. The bridal couple were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Woods. The bride was attired in a navy blue crepe ensemble suit with matching accessories. Immediately after the ceremony the bridal couple left for a honeymoon. On their return they will take up their residence on the bridegroom's farm in Madoc Township.

The Madoc Branch of Women's Institute is holding a two week course in Domestic Science in Madoc Town Hall, with Miss MacDiarmid, of Almonte, in charge. Approximately twenty-one ladies have registered for the course.

BRIGHTON STILL ON TOP RUNG OF TRENTON LEAGUE

Wooler is in Second Place Two Points Behind Leaders

AIRPORT LOSES

Schedule of Postponed Games Sees Many Upsets

Trenton, Feb. 20 (Special)—The postponed games of the Trenton and District Hockey League, which were called off on Friday night, were played on Monday with many upsets. The entire schedule will be moved ahead in order that the games will be played in the order of the schedule. Wooler suffered their second defeat of the season, when Doc. Vining's Frankford sextette outplayed them to win 4-2. Brighton are the sole occupants of the first position with 12 points, Wooler are second with 10, while the High School and Carrying Place are in the third place with 9 points each. Frankford and the Benedict-Proctor are in the last play-off position with 8 points apiece. The Benedict-Proctor, the largest scoring team in the league, defeated the Airport Tigers 7-0 in the second game with the Carrying Place, led by Norm Johnson, defeating the Cities Service 6-3.

The Frankford team, led by a new man, Munroe, checked the Wooler players thoughout the game to hold them scoreless until part way through the second period. V. Loney scored first, when Bryant was out of the net. Munroe took Bonisteel's pass for the second tally of the period. On the opening of the second, Munroe again scored, after working in past the Wooler defence. Finnegan shot a nice drive into the corner off Johnson's pass for the fourth counter. McColl scored first for Wooler when he took the rubber from the corner to skate in on Lohnes and score.

Wooler were pressing hard, keeping the play in the Frankford zone, although they could not get in a scoring position for the close checking of the papermill boys. "Yum" Ruttan netted the second and last counter for the Woolerites. Both teams had eleven men in uniform and all turned in a good game. The Wooler team are individualists and a good passing club can keep them bewildered.

Wooler—Goal, Bryant, defence, G. Ruttan and Claude Ruttan, centre, McColl, wings, Smith and Steenburg, subs, C. Ruttan, Scriven, Morrow, Teale, Redcliffe, Putnam.

The second game was no exhibition of hockey although Frenchy Richardson in the Tiger net was the best player on the ice. He has not much of a team ahead of him since Chink McCoy left for the north. Mattis added two more counters to his list to lead the goal getters of the league. The silver-players were minus the services of Tiddley Blakely, star centre player. Wilson and Moore were the choice of the Tiger forwards with Mattis, Miller, Wells and Beale being the pick of the winners.

Carrying Place 6; Cities Service 3

Norm Johnson, fleet-footed centre for the Carrying Place, scored four of his team's goals when they routed the Cities Service 6-3. The gas-slingers were minus their master mind, Benny Bowen, due to a strained back. Johnson was the difference of the teams. His teammates, Willie and Anderson all worked well to constantly invade the opposition's territory. Beanie Anderson, Miller and Fenton were the pick of the losers. The game went very even for two periods but the Carrying Place team forged ahead in the final canto to net three tallies.

TWEED IS FIRST IN SCHOOL LOOP

Has Six Wins, One Tie, And One Loss to Date

TWEED. — Tweed High School further strengthened their hold on first place in the Interscholastic League by defeating Madoc on Monday night by a score of 5 to 1. To date the locals have won six games, tied one and lost one. Stellar work by Martin, midget goalkeeper for the visitors, kept the score down to reasonable proportions. This little fellow batted out at least a dozen that were labeled goals, in some cases stopping three or four in succession. Two or three of the locals who are also members of the Junior O.H.A. team, did not play, saving themselves for the all-important Napanee game on Tuesday night. "Buck" Leal, "Tip" Tummon and Stan Luffman, members of the same aggregation, played "under wraps" so as not to unduly exhaust themselves. This also aided to keep the score down. The visitors lacked the experience of the home squad, but are a game bunch and didn't hesitate to step into their heavier opponents.

Tip Tummon scored the initial goal in the first frame on Leal's pass after several minutes of play. Martin's play was particularly good in this period, as he continued to block likely looking shots from Tummon, Leal and Luffman. Hill and Ross played splendid hockey. Jack Tummon secured the second counter on Leal's pass shortly before the period closed. Leal and Sayers drew penalties.

Madoc had a large share of territorial play in the second stanza, but their shooting was weak. Back checking and good defensive work kept them from getting in close for hard shots on Mouck, who didn't have much to do in this period. Parks made some nice sallies into Tweed territory and looked like a "comer." Ross and J. Tummon drew penaltes, but no damage was done during their absence. Luffman scored on Leal's pass with three minutes to go.

Leal secured a nice goal on a sparkling individual sortie into enemy territory right from the face-off. Tip Tummon sustained a minor cut over the left eye and retired from the game a few minutes later. Cronkwright notched the final counter when he banged in Bowers' pass. There was no slackening of the pace, as Madoc turned it on to avert a shut-out. Parks who had played a bang-up game at left wing, was finally rewarded with a well-merited goal just before the end of the period.

Referee—Tom Beatty.

MAROONS EARN TIE WITH PETES

Peterboro Had to Come From Behind Twice to Get Back

Peterboro, Feb. 21—In the first of home and home games, for the championship of the Big Six O.H.A. intermediate "A" group, Campbellford Maroons and Peterboro played a hard fought 2 to 2 tie, on Wednesday night. The second game of the series will be played in Campbellford on Friday night.

The Maroons played a cagey defensive game leaving the bulk of the puck carrying to the Petes and waiting for the breaks. The result was that although the home team did the greater part of the attacking they could get nothing better than a draw and had to come from behind twice to do that.

A transformer on the street outside the rink went out of commission half way through the third period and there was 30 minutes darkness before repairs were made and the game could go on.

Fred Ingram, Whitton and Davis were the stars for the Maroon team, while there was no particularly outstanding player for the Petes although Calladine figured in both their counters.

Campbellford Leads

Campbellford got the only goal of the first period three minutes after the start when Petes were a man short with Weir in the penalty box. Fred Ingram broke away and passed to Davis who registered on a shot from the side.

The Petes tied it up in the second period, Calladine getting credit for the goal, although Hendy knocked the rubber into his own net trying to clear. The Maroons took the lead again early in the last session. Whitton scoring on a pass from F. Ingram. After the half-hour wait for the lights to be repaired, the Petes evened it up again when Calladine passed from behind the Campbellford net to Creighton, who scored at close range. The teams:

Campbellford—Goal, Morton; defence, F. Ingram and H. Ingram; centre, Whitton; wings, Bush and Hendry; subs, Davis, McKay, Runions and Blue.

Peterboro—Goal, Foley; defence, Cadd and Weir; centre, Ellis; wings, Dundas and Dallin; subs, Calladine, Gardner, Creighton and Magee.

Referee—Cecil (Babe) Dye, Toronto.

BLACK HAWKS AT CANADIENS

Win Will Put Them in Tie With Boston For Second

(By the Canadian Press)

Clem Loughlin took time off today from the business of assuring Chicagoans they will have a team in the National Hockey League title series to lead his Black Hawks into Montreal for an encounter with Canadiens, that may go far to show whether they will.

With New York Rangers and Boston Bruins, their opposition, idle tonight, Loughlin figures the thing to do is to knock off Habitants and move up into a tie with Boston for second place in the American division, just two points behind Rangers and right in the race for group honors.

With a five-point lead over New York American, Canadiens feel they have third place in the Canadian Division safely tucked away but a win for the Amerks over St. Louis in New York tonight would wipe almost half, that lead out and they intend taking no chances.

GRILLS' GARAGE LOSES TO TWEED

Close Play Features Tweed's Final Fixture in League

TWEED. — Tweed was forced to go all out to defeat Grills Garage in their final engagement in a Central League fixture on Monday night. The final score of 6 to 5 indicates the closeness of the play. The visitors caught the locals napping in the first period and ran in three goals in the first ten minutes. Hay Day who played a bang-up game on left wing, secured the first two counters within two minutes on long shots from the blue line that completely eluded Thompson. Henn and Tim Day worked well on defence. The former scored on a beautiful, back-hand shot from an almost impossible angle. Ridley and Canning played their usual good games. St. Dennis played with his accustomed vigor. Bell and Shanque went splendidly for the locals, turning in their best efforts to date. Lafontaine handed out some useful bodychecks.

The first period was distinctly and decidedly the visitors'. Hap Day rifled in a long shot from well outside the blue line one minute after the period opened. Thompson fanned completely on that one. One minute later he repeated from slightly farther in. The visitors continued to bombard Thompson, but when close in failed to beat him until towards the end of the period, when St. Dennis was credited with a marker which did not appear to enter the net. However, the red light flashed and the visitors were three up. Maguire counted for the locals in this frame when his shot struck Busckard's pads and dribbled over the line. Bell and Shanque narrowly missed registering a second tally as the gong sounded.

Henn opened the second period with a counter on his nice back-hand shot to make the score 4 to 1 for the visitors, an almost insuperable obstacle as the visitors seemed unable to do anything wrong. A penalty to Ridley for tripping gave George Geraldi his opportunity and he gave the goalie no chance to block his shot. The play remained in centre ice for several minutes. Leal missed the corner of the net on a hard shot and Shanque made the score 4 to 3, when he took Bell's pass just before the period ended.

Maguire tested Buskard with hard shots at the beginning of the final frame. St. Dennis and Maguire began mixing things and aroused the ire of the referee. During their absence A. Geraldi tied things up on Meraw's pass. This gave the homesters new life and they made life miserable for Buskard. Leal took Shanque's pass midway through the period and sizzled one into the twine to put the locals ahead for the first time. Maguire added another on a beautiful shot, to make the score 6 to 4. The final counter was registered by Hap Day when for a third time he beat Thompson cleanly on a shot from well outside the blue line.

Borden Rollins handled the whistle to the entire satisfaction of both teams.

Tweed — Goal Thompson; defence, A. Geraldi, Lafontaine; centre, Maguire; wings, Meraw, A. Geraldi; subs Shanque, Bell, Leal.

Toronto Wins Last Game of Schedule From Oakville

Toronto, Feb. 21. —(CP)—Their season schedules over Toronto All-Stars and Oakville Villans rested today in preparation for the Senior "A" O.H.A. playoffs. Torontos brought the schedule to a close here last night with a 6-2 win over Villans and made it four straight victories over last year's intermediate champions.

After battering the lighter Oakville team in the first half of the opening period, All-Stars had no trouble. Fast-skating forwards worked in near-perfect cohesion in sifting through Oakville's defence.

Ken Grivel, Toronto star winger, scored three of his teams' goals, two in the first period and one in the third. Shortly Robinson, Jimmy Fowler and George Parsons each got one for Torontor in the last five minutes of the second period. Saral Allen got both Oakville counters, the first and last goals of the game.

LEAFS AND RANGERS CLASH IN FISTIC DUEL

Dissatisfied with the fist work of his teammate, Chuck Conacher has decided to avenge Red Horner by taking a swipe at Seibert's chin. This was the main bout of the hockey match between the New York Rangers and the Toronto Maple Leafs in New York. Seibert was nothing loath to take part in the slugging and is said to have gained the greater part of the glory. The Rangers won, 3-0. The Leafs avenged their defeat by crushing the Rangers in their next meeting 5-1.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

The city league pucksters assume the local sport headlines tonight when their semi-final play-offs commence with a double header. The opening game brings together Stan Hagerman's Alemites versus the S.E.A.C. kids, who recently sprung a surprise and signed 'Pete' Morgan to assure themselves of considerably more strength on the front line. The night-cap affair sees the Grills' Garage sextette clash with Jim Day's Trenton aggregation. As previously stated the city league semi-final games will consist of two games, goals to count on the round. The ultimate winners of the semi-finals will eventually meet in the league finals, a two out of three game series.

President Rollins allowed each team to bolster up somewhat in order, that faster hockey might be enjoyed in the city league play-downs. Each team has added at least two new faces to its roster with the result, that a keen play-down series can be looked for. There are still a few good players left in the players' pool and can be drawn for by the team managers before tonight's game only, as we understand, that no new additions will be permitted after tonight's games are played. President Rollins has such players as Hull, McCreary, Jeffery, Johnson, Harvey, Weir, Amo, Connors and a couple of more promising and youthful pucksters. Practically all of the teams in the group play-offs are jammed to the hilt with star players, thus assuring the patrons of the game of a real fast double header tonight at the Arena.

While the city leaguers are at it here in Belleville Sam Curry's Tweed juniors face a real task when they will try to pull down the eight goal lead now enjoyed by the Napanee juniors in the local junior group finals. Walter Gerow has a smart little team of junior Bees, but we cannot see, where they are eight goals better than the Tweed kids in one game. Gibbardites gave Mister Curry's lads the well known works in Napanee, but on the larger playing surface in Tweed tonight the Curry-led aggregation should come down in front, but eight goals should almost be sufficient for the Napanee kids to coast home with. Incidently we understand that Sam Curry asked to have 'Bouncer' Holway referee tonight's return game, which speaks highly of Holway's work as an official.

When the R.M.C. hoopsters downed the "Y" intermediates 21 to 20 in overtime on Monday night, somewhat of a record in local basketball circles was established, as the locals turned tables on the "Cadets" by exactly one point in Kingston, when Farley Faulkner successfully tossed a free shot, after the full time whistle had gone. It seems, that Faulkner was fouled just as the final gong sounded, but naturally he was entitled to his free shot, which he sank and as the score stood tied at the time, Faulkner's foul shot gave the "Y" team a one-point advantage and victory. In the return game played here on Monday night, the "Cadets" knotted the count just before full time, and in a similar manner to the local Kingston victory, the R.M.C. lads went on to win by one point, when they tossed one more foul shot than the local cagers. Incidently Harold Cowain takes us to town for not including his name in the box score of the junior cage game the other night. "Apologies, Harold, young feller, no offence meant."

While on the subject of basketball it might be well to mention the fact, that the Deacon A. C. won their second consecutive junior championship in the E.O.B.A. when they romped through their 1935 schedule without sustaining a single loss. The Deacons made a very creditable showing and are improving each time out. To trod rough-shod through an eight gamed schedule without sustaining a single loss is a feat well worth mentioning and that is exactly what Coach Geo. Laughlin's local junior hoopsters did. At no time during the entire schedule were the Deacons seriously pressed, except at Napanee, where they played shy four of their regular players. Even then they won by a substantial margin. The Deacons will find much stiffer opposition from now on, as they now advance into the provincial play-downs, where the cream of the province compete. Last year the Deacons were eliminated by the fast Broadview "Y" juniors, but not until after a hectic two game series had been played. The Deacons are a better club this year and should go far in their quest of higher basketball honors.

Eddie Wright's Peterboro intermediates ran into a snag right at home last evening when the Campbellford Maroons played 'em a two-all tie, so naturally the teams start at scratch back in Hydro Town on Friday night. They tell us that the management of the Peterboro Arena pulled one of the oldest chestnuts known in hockey circles. It seems that the Maroons had forged well to the fore, late in the third period and looked the better team, when suddenly the lights in the Peterboro Arena went out and all was black. As a matter of fact the lights stayed extinguished until the floundering Petes got re-organized once again. 'Tis an old trick, but it usually has its desired effects. Bill Calladine and his flying (?) and speedy team mates must have found the Maroon defence a little too rugged last night.

KEEPING ENGLAND CLEAN

Doncaster, England, —(CP)—"The authorities provide litter baskets to keep the streets clean and most of this type throw stuff all over the place," said an officer at the police court at Doncaster with reference to the case of a man fined $2.50 for putting refuse on the highway.

LOVE SCHOOL

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

Oh, there was no hint of murder. But it was cheap sordid stuff, the poor little tragedy tricked up in primitive passions. The story of a girl who high-hatted her friend and stole her friend's lover! a girl who took everything and gave—death.

Sick with digust, Faith read the garbled versions of the three who had remained on the scene—Ethylyn Bob, Dickie. They must have enjoyed telling how they had found her in Roger's arms; how Agnes had pleaded with her to give him up. How she had insisted on dancing the tango with Roger just to show off. And how she had turned on Agnes calling her names, and finally followed the lovesick girl to the window where the tragedy had occurred. No one admitted seeing a struggle, but Ethylyn claimed that Faith had hold of Agnes when Agnes fell.

What would Hunter think if he had had time to look over the day's paper! But the more conservative sheets he would be most likely to see would never feature the story. That was Faith's only hope. And now she was confronted with another problem that set her pacing up and down the gravelled terrace. Was it her duty to tell him?

It seemed cruel that this ugly thing must follow her even to the fastness of this tower. Stone dolphins frolicked in the fountain with a cool splashing of water. There were potted evergreens and climbing roses on a trellis. How thin the city looked! Faith leaned against the parapet only to shudder back from the steep smooth drop, the stone ravines below. Memory was your shadow, she thought. Where you went, there went your past.

Little Ito was whisking the table away, but although it was his paper Faith had carried away from his kitchen, he only picked it up and laid it on a wicker chair. When he had gone, he read the account once more.

She was reading it when Ito, grinning, returned to announce "Misu Blaclay."

Her husband calling on her in his bachelor quarters. How fantastic it all was! And now what would she tell him?

Hunter didn't hear or see Faith at first when she came lightly to the terrace door leading into the salon. He was standing in front of a portrait Faith had noticed earlier in the afternoon. He had changed into grey flannels, smooth across his straight back.

The room seemed to flow to him in his absorption, all of it focussed on the portrait. The gracious lady in black velvet looking out from the dark frame was his mother, of course. The same wide brow and slightly aquiline nose, the same eyes, a startling blue against black hair.

Hunter was wondering, no doubt what she would think of Faith's invasion into her son's life. The last of the Barclay's married to a girl who had been mixed up in a cheap Greenwich Village scandal.

Standing there so removed from her, he embodied everything Faith looked up to. She was frightened at the passion that shook her as she realized how insecure was her hold on him.

He turned with an exclamation and an apology. He was wearing a fresh white carnation, Faith noticed with a sinking heart. If he had seen Miss Prime, he had probably heard the story.

But apparently he hadn't been to the Bouquet Shop. Or perhaps Miss Prime hadn't cared to gossip about her assistant. In any case, he made no mention of having read or heard anything.

His gaze was impersonal as he looked at Faith silhouetted in the terrace door against the city sky. And all her joy dropped from her.

"I hope Ito has made you comfortable?" he said.

"Oh, yes, thank you."

"I see you have been out on the terrace. It's a lovely view."

"Marvellous." He made Faith feel awkward, self conscious. "It was awfully good of you to send me those things this morning," she said, and flushed at his silence.

When presently he spoke, his voice had taken on a businesslike inflection. "I have seen my lawyer," he said. "I find I can get an annulment quite easily."

FAITH CONFESSES

CHAPTER TEN

Their marriage annulled! Faith stared unhappily at Hunter. She hadn't hoped for a honeymoon. She hadn't expected him to act like an ardent bridegroom. She had even been prepared for some sort of arrangement whereby they might occupy separate apartments until—until——

But not to be married to him at all!

What a naive little fool she had been to imagine that any agreement made at pistol's point need be honorably kept. He must have been laughing up his sleeve at Philip Stevens all the time. Saving himself and Gertrude from a jealous husband with an "out" for him. That's one thing money could do; it could provide escapes.

He had gone on talking, but she hadn't listened. "You see it's very simple," he ended, crushing out his cigarette in a silver ashtray.

"Simple for you!" Faith retorted in her disillusionment." But what about me?"

"You?' He looked at her as if she surprised him. "Why my dear girl, you can't have enjoyed being put in this position any more than I".

She didn't help him out, so after a pause he continued with a trace of embarrassment. "Of course you can count on me for any financial—I mean I appreciate the annoyance to you, the unfortunate strain of last night. I should be delighted to compensate——"

"No—no—" Faith cried sharply.

She tried to hold herself in, to match her pride against his. No matter at what cost to herself, it was the noble, the dignified thing to do, she supposed, to bow very politely and to thank him for his courtesy in arranging for this annulment. Yes, that was probably what a girl in his set would do. A girl who could go right back to her family or sail for Europe, or even marry someone else.

But the import of his decision roused her to panic. And then to offer her money ——

Hunter's blue eyes were suddenly, unbearably gentle. "I beg your pardon if I have offended you," he said. "I thought you might —In fact, I remembered what you told me this morning, that when you met Mr. Stevens last night you were in difficulties. So I—"

"So you want to pay me first for marrying you, and then for not being married after all." Faith said hotly. "I am in trouble, but I'd rather die than take money from you. You can do whatever you want about the rest—" And she ran from him blindly, wildly, back to the terrace.

Faith's head whirled in a tumult of despair. Tears stung salty in her throat. Now, having had this glimpse of an ultimate goal, she was adrift again, penniless, jobless, hunted by the police. She could never climb up from the dust and ashes of her hopes.

She circled a corner along the terrace, and leaned against the wall of the penthouse, her hands clenched, her shoulders rigid, fighting for control. Shame to have given way before him!

"Oh!—there you are!" He rounded the corner, stopping short. "You gave me a scare."

She stayed where she was, her head turned, her skirt billowing in a fitful wind. If he started to be kind to her, she would break down.

He was kind. He took her cold little hand in his and drew her back to where the fountain played among flowers. "Now tell me about it," he said. "And we'll see what we can do."

"You can't do anything." She threw herself on a wicker lounge heaped with bright cushions.

He stood looking down at her, a quizzical lift to his black eyebrows. "Come now," he said patiently. "It can't be as bad as that. I wish you'd consider me your friend. For strangers, we've been through a lot together." And his rare boyish smile flashed out.

He had made his own stand quite clear and he could afford to relax, Faith thought bitterly. "There's only one thing you could do, and I'm sure you won't." Her voice was listless. What an idiot she was to be so impractical; to allow herself to be so easily cast aside. Opening her limp hand to let the chance of her life slip away.

He didn't immediately take her up. Thoughtfully he tapped a cigarette on his thin gold case, bending over to the table for a match. "Well, what is it?" His manner had altered once more to caution.

She sat up among the cushions. "You can stay married to me for a little while," she said.

"May I ask why I should?" His face had grown cold again.

You had to fight for yourself in this world, Faith told herself. No one else would fight for you. After a pause, she answered, "I saved your life last night."

Hunter held his cigarette off, his little finger flecking an ash on to the gravel. "I haven't forgotten that," he said gravely. "In other words, my debt is very great."

"Oh, you don't understand," Faith burst out. "I don't talk your way. A lady wouldn't bargain, would she?"

"I'm not so sure," he said slowly.

"She wouldn't have to," Faith went on. "No, you wouldn't understand, and if I told you, you'd think I was whining or something. You don't know what security means. You've always had it."

"Is that why you want to stay married to me for a little while?" His handsome face stared broodingly down at her.

Was that the reason, she wondered. Was it fear or love—or both? She said defiantly, "I need the protection of your name. I need to hide."

"Why?" He didn't sound encouraging.

If she told him why, he wouldn't help her—not that way. She would lose him, she thought desperately. He would despise her.

"You'll have to be frank with me, you know," Hunter said. "I'll be frank with you first if you wish."

Faith accepted the respite that would give her time. "Please do." Then with a sense of terror she saw the tabloid paper she had left on the chair within range of his gaze. If he saw it now he would never believe she meant to tell him, and she wasn't sure that she would.

Her hand slid toward it. He was looking past her over the low wall at the outlines of other towers against the blue sky. Deftly she slid the paper between the cushion and the chair.

"I was very young when I went through the war," Hunter began. "Lots of us lost more than our lives over there. We lost our youth. I suppose you might call it a shift of values. I mean the usual A.B.C's of youth became the X. Y. Z.'s. Do you understand?"

"No, I don't," Faith admitted.

"I didn't think you would." He lit another cigarette. "I'll put it another way. The A.B.C.'s, let us say, are simple quantities or rather qualities—like believing in Santa Claus and eternal love and all that sort of thing. The X.Y.Z.'s—" he paused. "Well, they're the unknown quantities. For instance, there may be a Santa Claus, there may not be. But there is certainly nothing eternal except death, and even then I, for one, can't be sure what happens after death. Have I shocked you?"

Faith's grey eyes were puzzled. She had never heard anyone talk like this before. "You mean," she said slowly, "You don't believe in anything any more."

"That's about it," he said. "Hence the penthouse, speeding, travel, good wines, pretty women—raising hell generally. A modern form of hedonism which means the profession of pleasure."

"But you do love Mrs. Stevens!" slipped from Faith.

"That's got nothing to do with it," Hunter said shortly, and it was as if he had said— "That is in extremely bad taste."

After a silence he went on: "You see I don't want to be married. It isn't in the program. If I ever do marry—you'll excuse me but I don't consider this a marriage—" He paused to pick his words. "Well, I may owe something to the family name, you know. I should choose a girl with that in mind."

Faith wanted to cry out in her hurt—"But you are married to me whether you like it or not." But she sat there wanting him more and more as he became harder to win, more desirable. Was that love, she wondered? Putting everything you believed in one man so that if you lost him, nothing was left.

Her heart almost stopped as he sat down in the chair where she had hidden the tabloid paper. A corner of it showed above the cushion.

"It's your turn now," he said. "We start on the promise that I owe you my life. I'm ready to pay that debt if you can prove to me that in accepting an empty ceremony I am really helping you."

"You would—oh, you would!" cried Faith, and stopped in confusion. Everything she said brought her nearer to the inevitable confession that would lose him for her.

"You'll really have to speak more plainly." Hunter strolled over to the fountain, watching the play of light in the fanshaped spray. His hand strayed to the white carnation in his buttonhole.

"Did you go to the Bouquet Shop today?" Faith still hesitated.

He glanced at her oddly. "As a matter of fact, I didn't I sent out for my boutonniere at the club. Why?"

Little Benny's Note Book

Today in school Miss Kitty was telling us about animals being born with instincts on account of nature being so wonderful and everything, Miss Kitty saying, Look at the berds, you couldn't have a more striking example than the berds. They have no callenders and no compass and no maps and yet at the ferst sines of winter they rise in a body and low and behold with unerring precision they fly southwerd to warmer climes. Now what wonderful things do they possess that makes them capable of such an amazing feet? Miss Kitty said.

Wich Shorty Judge waved his hand saying, A swell sense of dirrection, and Miss Kitty said, They have much more than that, because even human beans have been known to have remarkable sense of direction, such as the Indians in the trackless forrests. Berds have an instinct, that's what they have, a marvellous strange instinct wich for millions of years has told them when and where to migrate for self preservation the ferst law of nature, and now if there are no questions we will go on to the arifmetic period.

Being bad news, and us fellows made sines to each other to ask questions and use up more time, and I waved my hand, saying, Would the other berds follow, their leeder if he made a mistake and started to fly east, or would they start to argew with him or would they just keep on going south by their own private instincts?

There can be no such thing as a mistake, nature is too wonderful, Miss Kitty said, and Shorty Judge waved his hand, saying, Well in case the leeder just did happened to get stuck on account of being absent minded, would he ask the other berds what they thawt?

I just got through explaining that such a situation is impossible, and now unless somebody has a sensible question we will drop the subjeck, Miss Kitty said. Well, Raymin, what is it? she said, and Raymin Levy said. Do they ever catch a hitch by taking rides on clouds that happen to be going the same direction?

How many boys in this class consider that a sensible question? Miss Kitty said, and everybody raised their hand and Miss Kitty said, Such a class, we will go on to arifmetic. Wich we did.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Those who passed Tarzan now, never guessed that beneath his stolen uniform beat a savage heart filled with relentless hatred for the Reds. First he wanted to locate the hotel where he believed he believed he would find Olga, the spy.

Where the girl was, doubtless too there would be Ivan Karsenoff, who was either her confederate, her sweetheart, or both. Finding the building, he considered entering and enquiring for those he sought.

His beter judgment prompted him to reconnoiter first. Looking into all the lighted windows and seeing neither of those for whom he had come, he swung lightly to the veranda's roof and continued his investigation through the windows of the second storey.

In a rear room the blinds were drawn. He heard voices within, and once he saw what appeared to be a woman's figure silhouetted a moment against the blind. Creeping closer, the ape-man heard a man speaking.

BLOODSTAINS ON TROUSERS SAYS DR. E. FRANKISH

four orange. A. That is right.

Q. But this is nearly resemble to the expert—any one group? A. Yes.

Q. Did you determine in this instance the origin? A. No, where I am unable to obtain an original sample of blood of the patient I am not able to do so.

Q. You have no knowledge of the blood of Mrs. Vermilyea or the blood upon the trousers, and the clots to which they belong? A. No.

Q. Then the blood upon the trousers might have got there through shaving? A. The Witness could not definitely trace the human hair and the "rat" hair given him.

Q. Any of the stains found might have belonged to any one of the four classes? A. Yes.

Q. There were no human blood stains on the rear portion of the car interior? A. No.

Q. Nor on the blankets given you? A. No.

Q. The texture of the blanket is particularly susceptible to the absorption of blood? A. Fairly so, but not as much as cotton.

Q. Your training takes you into the realm of woollens and cottons? A. I couldn't tell the percentage, but merely the fibres.

"There was no evidence of stain on the blankets", witness agreed.

There was nothing on the body either. All three overcoats were also free from bloodstains, he said under close questioning by defence.

Precious Attack

Col. Greer referred to cases of previous nature in which witness may have had experience.

Q. Have you ever seen a case where the wrist had been severed? A. No. This case, he added, could be described as a "ferocious attack."

A series of questions taken and answered at the preliminary hearing were agreed with by witness. "Repeated blows of the type delivered would be difficult to understand," was one answer in the cross-examination by witness. This was identified by him when pointed out by defence.

Mr. Urquhart re-examined the witness.

Q. Have you had any experience in your examinations of abnormalities of the human mind? A. I could not say what mental processes lie behind some of their actions.

Q. You are not a psychiatrist? A. No.

Justice Jeffrey recalled witness, and pointed to one answer made by witness at the preliminary hearing. "I can not but believe that anyone who strikes another with a hatchet on the first time being cannot realize what they are doing." What did you mean by this—that he did not realize what he was doing?, asked Justice Jeffrey.

Witness pointed out that in instances where people are provoked they would not know what they are doing.

Did Not Accept Answer

Justice Jeffrey did not accept this answer, "Did this man realize what he was doing?"

Witness replied that several things were upon his own mind when he had made the answer.

Justice Jeffrey: "You say that this man did not know what he was doing. That was a very important statement".

Recess was then called for the afternoon.

Brothers on Stand

With Clarence Vermilyea, brother of the accused on the stand, Crown Attorney Donnan resumed the questioning following continuance of court.

Q. You are a younger brother? A. Yes.

Witness stated he lived on the old homestead of his father. He recalled the death of his father in 1923 and the arrival of Harold home from California four days later. Harold did not attend the funeral it was said.

Crown Attorney Donnan produced a copy of the Father's will and it was identified.

The document read by Mr. Donnan, concerned certain parcels of land bequeathed along with certain sums to his sons and other properties and sums to his wife and daughter. The will contained also bequests of jewelry to be divided. Harold, Arthur and Clarence were named executors of the estate.

Q. Was Harold here when probate was issued? A. Yes, on Nov. 8th, 1923.

Q. Was Harold in the vicinity of Belleville at the time your mother's will was drawn, 20th day of Oct., 1922? A. I am not sure.

Witness on the night of Oct 4, 1924, related events as they occurred. He had been in bed and had heard his wife receive the telephone call advising of the accident. Later he rode to the hospital with his brother, Arthur.

A letter shown witness, was identified as being received by him from second through the signature. A second letter pertaining to disposition of furniture received by him was also identified by signature.

Q. Did you ever see your brother sign his name? A. I have.

Q. Do you know if your mother had independent means? A. Yes, I know she had.

Defence asked no questions.

Arthur Vermilyea, another brother of accused gave his age as 45. Under questioning of Mr. Donnan, he declared he had not seen accused for some 11 years previous to October 4th, 1934. He recalled that evening "quite vividly."

First word of the tragedy was brought him by his sister-in-law. He had then journeyed to Belleville by car and visited the hospital.

Col. Greer took the witness. A letter dated April 17th, 1934 produced by defense was tentatively identified by him. The letter was purportedly from accused relating to a division of his mother's property. Witness was then excused.

Turnkey Identifies Document

Joseph Samain, turnkey of the County Jail, identified a document as having been received by him from accused. Witness had been present when it was written and established identification of the handwriting. Defence counsel had no questions.

Ralph Evans, Toronto, an officer of the New York Life Insurance Company, identified documents received by him from head office. They were applications made for life insurance. A third document sent for had not yet arrived, witness said.

Col. Greer questioned witness of the documents and witness' knowledge of the papers. Witness admitted little knowledge of the papers.

Q. They might just as well have been sent here by mail, for all you know of them?

Witness nodded and was excused. The documents were not allowed by the court to be filed as evidence.

Court was then adjourned until 2.30 a.m. Thursday.

It is expected that prosecution will conclude its evidence on Thursday. A large part of the evidence on which day will be the presenting of the sealed evidence taken before an inquiry coroner's jury held recently at San Bernardino at California.

Claude A. Rawlings, traveller for the Aberley Knitting Mills Ltd., Toronto, died suddenly in Dolan's Drug Store shortly after four o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, when he was stricken with a heart attack. In the afternoon he called at the Walker Store and not feeling well went to Dolan's and intimated he was suffering from severe pains in the stomach. Fred Woolley was on duty in the store and was at the cash register and turning towards the back shop, saw the man lying on the floor. He immediately called Dr. Forster but life was extinct.

INDIAN IS HELD IN MAN'S DEATH

Dawson Miracle Suspected of Slaying of Norfolk County Farmer

Simcoe, Ont., Feb. 22.—(CP)—Dawson Miracle, 30, Non-Status Indian of the Six Nations Reserve, today was held on a charge of manslaughter as a suspect in the slaying of George Benson, Norfolk County farmer, killed with an axe yesterday.

The young Indian was arrested by Provincial Police Sergt. Ross as he walked along a road in the Reserve, about a mile from the scene of a fatal attack in which Bilton was battered to death.

Bilton was left to bleed to death with three axe wounds in the head and eighteen fractured ribs, evidently from trying to ward off blows. He was found unconscious by a fire with a strawberry crate and some potato bags in the cellar of the Benson shack. The fire, police say, was to destroy evidence.

The victim of the 65-year-old farmer was found hidden among the limbs of an evergreen near the shack and investigators today were working on the possibility the killer had left it there with the intention of returning to get the battered instrument, along with the bloodstained clothing in the shack, still to be examined for fingerprints today.

Miracle will be arraigned before Magistrate Robertson here on Monday. It is expected a remand will be asked by the Crown, while Provincial and County Police under the direction of Inspector Charles Gurnett, pursue the task of gathering evidence.

Dr. O. K. Shirton of Waterford coroner in charge of the case, has set Monday at 2 p.m. in the town hall, as the time and place for the opening of the inquest.

Vermilyea a Paranoiac Suffering Delusions In Dr. Howland's Opinion

Grandeur, Persecution Delusions Referred to by Doctor

EVIDENCE ON HEALTH

Daughter in Deposition Tells of Father's Talk of Suicide

Dr. Gordon Howland, psychiatrist, called today by the defence at the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea, charged with the murder of his mother, described Vermilyea as of the "paranoid type". A "square peg in a round hole", and said this type was prone to exaggerations of the senses.

Vermilyea was defined by the doctor as of a paranoiac type suffering delusions of grandeur and persecution, complicated with melancholy in his back that did not exist according to the facts, and on medical examination, though Vermilyea swore a back knee. We accused man was of a strongly determined nature, Dr. Gordon Howland testified.

Letters, Vermilyea had purported to written members of his family from California, contained evidence of the paranoiac delusions of grandeurs of grandeur and persecution the witness opined.

Dr. Howland's evidence followed depositions taken by an Inquiry Commissioner in California, one from Vermilyea's daughter, Aurelia, aged 20, that told of "Gordon's" and his "dictatorial" actions. The daughter said her father talked of committing suicide and once put his head in the gas oven, a poisoned paste, which she seized and "threw away". Other witnesses spoke of peculiarities in their depositions.

Absence of Reflexes

Dr. Howland, with 35 years' experience that included study in London, England, and fellowship in Regional and United States Medical Colleges, told of a five-hour examination of Vermilyea last January 13. He said reflexes of the body as a whole showed nothing but the physician failed to get "knee jerks". This could be startled, he said, to some organic condition, such as neuritis, nerve deficiency, pernicious anaemia or brain tumors.

"This man," he said, "has the most powerful muscles of any person I have ever examined."

Complaint of Hearing Loss

Vermilyea, he said, complained of the diminished defect in his speech, and "this might tend to develop an inferiority complex". He told the examiner he could not understand other people and was not understood. This might be divided people into two classes Grandeur and Persecution. Grandeur ambitions were only an "ordinary not anti-social, but was not a "joiner".

Histories Compared

Case histories of Harold Vermilyea and his second cousin, Gerald Vermilyea, (who was confined to an asylum), showed many points in common, Dr. Howland stated.

Gerald complained early in his life of trouble with his back; Harold had the same complaint, and also of headaches.

The physician examined Vermilyea's back and found a "powerful spasm", what he called the "surgical brace". Dr. Howland said in his opinion Vermilyea "hyperreacted" to pain, although several bending tests and hard exercise failed to find nothing wrong. He also had the same mentioned—hyperreaction to osteo-arthritis. Vermilyea had told physicians he had a kidney condition "would finally drive him insane". Dr. Howland said Vermilyea apparently was suffering from a delusion with regard to his supposed disease. Such, he said, is common to a paranoiac type."

Asserted Appears Brighter

Harold W. Vermilyea appeared brighter in gayer spirits at the Friday morning session of the murder trial. The carefully groomed accused, who spent only just a few minutes before the jury files in, chatted with counsel, and then arranged his top coat over the rail, and then busied himself with his heavy rimmed spectacles, carefully wiping them with a white handkerchief, then looked keenly about the court room and listened to the evidence apparently in recognition. The curious stare and the spectators were coolly returned. Once or twice before court opened he engaged his three Provincial Police guards in snatches of conversation. He chewed gum constantly as he has done on previous days. With the opening of court the accused rose, rises and directly faces the bench, the only time during the day when he visibly recognizes proceedings. During the remainder of each session he toils in his chair, his head bowed in the jury.

Roy Vermilyea's Deposition

Mr. G. B. Smith, defence counsel, opened the day's session with the reading of Roy Vermilyea's deposition of Roy Vermilyea. This had been taken by commission at San Bernardino, California.

The witness said he was a third cousin and first cousin Clarice and Glendale, California. He was employed in a "grain furnishing" shop. In the questioning, witness related traces of mental illness in relations in the family. He said he knows to be cordial and not in the least strained. He was spoken of as a good worker on his own family.

In Second Cousin

R. C. Cowan, brought up the reading of answers given at the hearing. One question as to the nature of Gordon's breakdown in 1931 said could not be answered by witness. The breakdown in the two brothers was said by witness to have developed gradually. Roy corroborated the story of conversation with Harold, saying he was a second cousin. His knowledge of the suicide of his aunt was from hearsay, as the event occurred before he was born.

Chas. J. Miner, next witness at the hearing, residing near Oxnard, California, had known accused 20 to 25 years.

Peculiarities Noted

Witness, a director of the Ontario, California, Y.M.C.A. Fruit Packing House told of accused being steadily employed with the company for two seasons, about six months a season. Accused was employed to get new fruit growers for the company. Witness had seen accused at least two, and three or four times a week. Peculiarities had sometimes been noted in actions of accused. He told the examiner the two men had been to sign up a grove. Vermilyea said in a peculiar manner. When they were out of the hearing of the boss. He had acted unusually. Just paced all the time like an animal in a cage in a circus. When he was discharged he was excited he was inclined to stammer and "jerk" sometimes. He would break off a conversation or would change the topic for no reason at all. They would get together and an offer of a drink at a soda fountain. Witness said he had not had on this occasion been concerned with Vermilyea's behaviour, but suddenly accused broke off and walked away. This had happened on other occasions.

Says Vermilyea High Strung

"Vermilyea was nervous and high strung," he said.

The cross-examination read by Mr. Deacon brought out the statement that during the two seasons accused had been with the company, he had gained the reputation of being "a very good man". He had been liked by the people with the firm.

Re-direct examination revealed that witness had often helped accused in his work, the purchasers and packers of the company reported of accused, "a bright young man, but a very nervous one."

At Pastime Club

Charles W. Morrison, next witness before the commissioner Mr. T. W. Duckworth, said he resided at Oxnard, California, and had been employed as a clerk at the Pastime Club for 5½ years. "had known Vermilyea for some six months. He first got him up to five times a week at the club during the first couple of years so. When accused came to the club he generally played billiards.

Questioned, witness said "You could not always tell what the accused was going to do or how long he would play." Generally when he played he limited himself as to time. Sometimes he was easy to play with, other times not so easy.

Incident of Cue

Once accused had struck his son several times in the billiard room of the club with a cue, witness (Continued on Page 2, Col. 1)

Trial May Not End Till Middle of Week

"We're pretty positive that the trial will not drag over into the middle of next week," stated Mr. George Urquhart, K.C., today, when questioned as to the probable time of conclusion of the hearing of evidence. "It may be Wednesday before we finish," added the chief Crown Prosecutor.

Questions to Be Asked by The Opposition

Toronto, Feb. 22—(CP)—Inquiries as to dismissals of civil servants since the government of Premier Mitchell F. Hepburne took office, names of those whose appointment as King's Counsel has been cancelled and salaries of various deputy ministers are among the 23 questions, which members of the opposition in the Ontario Legislature have added today they will ask the Government Monday.

"How many civil servants have been dismissed or have resigned on request of the government since the Hepburn government took office?" reads a question from T. P. Lancaster, Peterborough. A. H. Acres, Carleton, follows with a question as to how many civil servants were "struck off" the civil service list since July 11.

W. H. Price, Former Attorney General, denies information as to the persons whose recommendations for appointment as His Majesty's counsel learned in the law were cancelled by order-in-council since the 11th of July, 1934." Dramatic Halt to Trial When Psychiatrist Says Accused Man Insane

Dr. Howland Testifies on Ability of Man to Stand Trial

ASKING OF QUESTIONS

Vermilyea Able to Follow Trial Says Witness

After five minutes this afternoon the Jury returned to court and decided Vermilyea is fit to stand his trial.

The jury at the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea, charged with murder of her mother, was re-sworn this afternoon to determine if the prisoner was fit to stand trial.

Vermilyea murder trial was dramatically halted shortly after three o'clock this afternoon when Dr. Gordon Howland, psychiatrist, who had given his evidence today at the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea, charged with murdering his mother, testified that if Vermilyea killed his woman last October it was insane at the time. In answer to a question, Dr. Howland had said his sanity depended on the face of the evidence and on the strength of the examination certify Vermilyea was insane and would willingly sign a certificate committing him to an asylum.

On the trial on the ability of Vermilyea to stand trial, Dr. Howland on repeated questioning by Col. Greer, admitted that accused had ability to stand trial.

Dr. Gordon Howland was still on the stand at the time Vermilyea's trial on Friday afternoon. Col. Greer; defence counsel continued the questioning of witness in respect to the Vermilyea family. The commissioner, Mr. Justice Singer, pondered the questions directed to him before the close of the morning session. The list of the family as presented by Col. Greer before noon recess had been:—

"There were four suicides. Two people were certified insane: one of Solomon was confined to his home during the later years for acts of violence. Number Vermilyea saw spirits and had visions of money and Abe C. became a child. Abe C. became childish; Delilah Reid became childish; an uncle, Charles, became childish."

Col. Greer then asked:

Q. Taking these things into consideration these people who went insane—what would you say about Vermilyea? A. I do not know psychiatrists that there is a suggestion of influence that there is a feeling that in a family where the stock is strongly psychopathic that a person who does not follow the line is the line strongly characterstic of psychopathic personality or a man with a distinct psychopathic trend showing tendencies of delusions.

Impulsivity Noted

Witness broke off at this point to refer to California, mentioning Vermilyea's impulsivity with people. Accused is that they appear normal but may: my experience has been that in some cases they are unable to carry on. I am sometimes surprised at memory became bad, he forgot easily his normal. It was testified that he was able to carry on suddenly walk away. This also happened in the cell, when I questioned him. His personality is a typical paranoid condition. One other instance in the cell. Witness referred to statements made by accused's daughter, Aurelia, in the U.S. Witness said that I believe he also attempted it once; that he had hallucinations and took long walks in the middle of the night; he rushed from the theatre in the middle of the picture.

Vanity of Dress

"It is my idea that that man was in a paranoid state and his mental faculties were not entirely normal. The witness said he had made a thorough examination and found nothing wrong with accused's mental condition.

The doctor —Witness referred to the accused's vanity of dress. "This is frequently the evidence of a breakthrough life".

The paranoid likes to dress and show himself off; I believe he goes a little too far in this matter. We have also heard that during this depression time he had spoken of he had kept this up.

Thinks History Complete

Col. Greer continued. "You believe you have a complete medical history? A. Yes.

Q. Are you able to form an opinion of the man's sanity? A. He had always been a psychopathic, oversensitive egotistical, had certain tendencies right, and with the history of this delusional symptom, developing before the crash, this man was degenerating and with the financial strain developed an acute condition that he was insane; a condition in which these delusions of persecution and grandeur have been manifested."

Question of State

Q. And at the time of the commission of this crime—if he did commit it—what was his state? — Insane?

A. "Uncontestably," replied the doctor.

Col. Greer referred to the trips to the city allegedly made by the accused. Witness continued—These trips and the disappearance are characteristic of the delusion suffered by paranoids. Sometimes this type flies off a gun, smashes a window or gives some warning.

Mr. Urquhart took the witness. It was disclosed by him that the only examination made by witness was in the five hour test. He had read the evidence given by witness, Sullivan and others.

Willing to Certify Man Insane

Mr. Urquhart asked: —"Doctor, would you have any hesitation in signing a certificate committing this man to an institution for the insane? A.—According to the evidence I have heard and examinations made I would not hesitate to do this.

Mr. Urquhart objected to this question.

"It's one man only," he ordered.

The jury was immediately asked to retire as the question had been asked as to whether Vermilyea was competent to conduct his defence or stand his trial.

Vermilyea's Appearance

Throughout the lengthy questioning of the medical witness on psychiatry, Harold W. Vermilyea sat unmoved. Justice Jeffrey resumed court. He instructed the jury that Dr. Howland had testified that accused was insane at the time of the commission of the crime, but was willing to sign to that effect, and have him committed to an institution. The court pointed out that question of insanity had been raised. The defence of insanity relates back to the time the offence was committed."

Jury Re-Sworn

The court at this time directed that the jury be re-sworn. Bibles were passed to the jurors and held by them as the oath was repeated. "You shall well and truly try, whether Harold W. Vermilyea is fit to stand trial."

Dr. Howland was then recalled to the stand. Col. Greer took up the questioning.

Believes Man Insane

Defence counsel then re-examined earlier parts of the evidence given today, the jury retired.

Dr. Howland was recalled by the defence counsel and asked briefly if he then asked—"How much mental power is required?"

Col. Greer—It is your belief he is insane? A. Yes.

Q. Then do you say as to his being able to instruct counsel in his defence?

Witness again pondered for some time. This is a very difficult question. Accused knows what questions you put to him; his memory capacity is impaired. A. Yes.

—Wait", ordered Defence Counsel Smith, "I ask a question.—Assuming you say as to his mental capacity regarding these questions?

A.—If you ask these questions he would be able to understand and reply to them.

Q.—But how about his being able to instruct counsel? A.—I have to know—the questions put to him.

Can't Follow Trial

Q. What do you say as to his mental capacity to instruct counsel to conduct his defence? Do you think the man insane? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Are there periods when insane people have periods of mental lucidity? A. Yes, there are certain people.

Q. Then during this trial had accused had these periods? A. Yes, I would say he could follow the trial.

ONTARIO WITNESS TELLS OF ACTIONS OF ACCUSED MAN

"Used to Fly Off Handle" Says Brown in Deposition

FAMILY HISTORY

96-Year-Old Man Tells of Mental Illness of Mother

Harold W. Vermilyea, accused of the murder of his mother on the night of October 4, last, while living at his home in Ontario, California during the fall of 1934 had undergone a noticeable change in actions, speech and manner, friends of the standard. This morning town testified at the Thursday afternoon hearing of the trial through depositions previously taken at an inquiry commission at San Bernardino, California, and produced in court yesterday.

"Harold was queer—I always thought he was one of the queerest men I ever knew" stated Thomas Dale Brown of Oxnard, California, an inspector of the General Electric Company of that town. Testifying in the trial of Vermilyea charged to become worse, or more noticeably affected by things or conditions", added this friend of three or four years' standing declared at the inquiry.

"He used to fly off the handle frequently and would swear in a fit of rage. His memory seemed to become more faulty and was concentrating on trifling things, even the orders I gave him from time to time; things that I would seem to be in a hard-up condition and was anxious to find some kind of employment" Brown of Oxland, California, manager of a citrus fruit packing exchange, told counsel who explored of the accused, declared in his deposition. Defence counsel objected.

Hospital Head Testifies

In the early part of Thursday afternoon the trial was resumed—

Witness explained it was hard to get down to a purely mental attitude.

Insane All Life

Q. Will he continue to be insane for the future? A. For the rest of his life.

Q. Are you able to give an opinion on the specific question as to whether he could follow this criminal without having an interview with him?

Again a long pause on the part of witness. Justice Jeffrey asked: Accused could he understand the trial and to instruct counsel? A. He could understand the trial and to instruct counsel. The question is, is he sane enough to appreciate what is going on, and instruct counsel?

Witness pointed out that accused had undergone a thorough examination of his condition.

Col. Greer hammered at witness in his examination regarding the ability of accused to stand trial. Witness finally agreed accused was.

ayers. Then he ordered his son to go out to the car. Winston had been present at this conference. Owens had could not tell what was the conversation. He continued playing after the boy left. When he was playing Vermilyea was always very argumentative.

Vermilyea always believed he was in the right and would argue over things." he said.

Often during the games there would be quarrels. The men he played the worse he became.

Questioning revealed that Owens often stopped in town walks alone, mostly at night.

Cross examination of witness read by Mr. Donnan, revealed that Owens was a good billiard player.

He had studied the game. His mentality was not worse than other players at the billiard rooms.

Players came worse than Vermilyea, declared Owens.

Striking of Son

At the time he had struck his son with a cue, accused had been "very mad," said witness. Owens had been absent for five times with the tip of the cue, the small end. The boy was crying, asking the boss on his back and neck from the tip of the cue. Then the boy went out and later the two went home. The boy did not appear to be injured. Vermilyea was usually sociable except at times when he was provoked.

Accused had periods "when he wouldn't have anything to do with him."

Catherine Aurelia Vermilyea, age 20, a daughter of accused, testified she was a junior in a University and was working her own way through. She lived at home with Vermilyea and her father. Since 1929 the residence had been continuous.

Says Father Talked of Suicide

The daughter testified that when her father had been laid off in 1929, he had become morose, gloomy and despondent. She thought of suicide several times", testified the daughter.

Q—What remarks did he make on these occasions? A—He said that would be an end to everything.

Mixing of Ant Paste

One time when he was particularly by head he had been mixing ant paste. She noticed that he was mixing it with flour and sugar and putting it in ant paste. The poison was taken away from him and thrown out, and another whole box procured to do the like again. She went to bed and cried herself to sleep, she said.

Walk at Night With Dog

Often when either of the children did anything to stir him up, he would not speak all day. He did not sleep well, but often got up and went out, would take the dog in the middle of the night for a walk to Upland, two and a half miles.

On Saturday nights he generally went to a picture show and took his daughter and son very often he would leave the picture in the most exciting spot, walk to the lobby and then come back. So far as she knew he did not go to the rest room.

At card games held in neighbors' homes, the same actions of getting up and walking around would happen. He would leave other players sitting.

Change in 3 Years Noted

During the last 2 years "he was not the dad he used to be," deponent said. He became morose, more dictorial and unpleasant and swore more than he ever did before. At times he was obstinate, confined within himself and when he made up his mind to do a thing he would do it. He would walk about from room to room in the house. Sometimes he would embarrass her before girl friends on certain types of dress or clothing. Whenever the daughter, Sometimes a question of the type of dress to be worn was asked by him and he would refuse. She would not be changed on the matter, she added. This condition has been magnified a lay the late of her father's job.

Generosity as to Money

He was fairly generous in regard to money. He was not the same daddy that he had been by any means, Aurelia said.

Mrs. Donnan cross-examination in deposition. In discussion about the dress he'd like a new pair of some points of the dress and I'd make another. He thought he was always right. In the playing of card games, the players never sat around together. She was aware that he might have got tired of sitting and would get up to walk around.

Witness was well acquainted with the fact that her father wore a back brace. He had become used to it and "did not know he had it on." Medical treatment had also been given him for his back.

Divorce in 1926

The divorce of accused occurred in 1926. "My grandmother had always been very fond of me," said witness. "But she had sided with her mother because he was her son." The grandmother had come to California prepared to testify at the divorce proceedings, but when the divorce had furnished corroborative evidence concerning bonding.

In 1926 the divorce have anything to do with your father's getting the job?" Q. "I don't know," A. I never asked him.

At this point some curses and oaths were read into the court to describe the type of language accused used to his children. The court paused. The long walks at night, you believe that was the beginning of his financial worries and the loss of his job it was stated.

Examination Into Mental Facts

Witness again affirmed the opinion that accused was afraid of the police and told of her asking it from her father when he was sitting in the car. "He ran the throttle. It away." "I believe he meant to take his own life." Her father had locked at her and did not say a word when she asked the time.

The testimony of the witness, read by Col. Greer, described "very affectionate feelings between accused and her grandmother." "Sometimes grandmother would tell me that accused didn't treat daddy well enough," testified the daughter.

Psychiatrist's Examination

Following a brief morning recess of the jury, requested by Col. R. Greer, defence counsel, Dr. Gordon Hoyland, physician, a graduate of Toronto University, a student of psychiatry abroad, in London, England, and in Paris, and several medical colleges in Europe and in the United States. A period of 35 years' practice behind him. Accused was examined on Jan. 12th last. A five hour examination with him in the cell, related the doctor. Three hours in the morning and 2 hours in the afternoon. "Accused had done most of the talking and told me the personal history of his life and family from the time he was a little boy. The examination had been held to find out the man's mental processes.

It was an examination into his nervous system, his reflexes, his motive system and other points.

Witness declared that nothing was found in the reflexes of the body as a whole, except a few minor points.

Failure to Get Knee Jerks

Witness had failed to get his knee and ankle jerks.

Q. What is the probability of that being the case in an ordinary individual?

A. In diseases of the lower spinal cord, brain tumors in certain cases, certain conditions would reflexes would be absent.

Defence obtained an examination of the word "knee jerk". "These reflexes are involuntary?" he asked. A. Yes.

Q. And these were absent? A. I failed to find them.

Q. Is there absence significant? A. There may be some organic trouble, but I couldn't say. I did not find a fair test. But he appeared normal in the reactions had.

"The man has the most powerful muscles of any person I have ever examined," related witness.

"The accused man had complained of some pains in the head, loss of memory, the medical witness continued. "This might tend to develop a stammer."

"Stammerers are generally nervous people," the witness said, and that the man stammered most when he was first beginning to speak.

Witness testified the stammering was a possible cause of nervousness by making him self conscious. The accident he had said, he was not a nervous person. He had taken a course in commercial and graduated in 1907 from University. The medical statement impressed Dr. Howland very much. "Did you," Dr. Howland appeared suspicious of people and said that he did not make friends easily.

"He told me he often did not understand other men; and they did not understand him. He had also divided people into two classes—friends and enemies. This impressed me very much."

Objection to Letter

Col. Greer referred to several records. A letter was produced by witness and handed over. Defence counsel closely examined it.

Q.—He had some correspondence with accused's daughter? A—Yes.

Mr. Urquhart pointed out that Miss Vermilyea had been fairly and fully examined. He therefore objected to reference.

Ambition Not For Wealth

Objection was sustained by court.

Witness after being requested to pass over the contents of the letter was invited by Col. Greer to continue.

"I asked him about his ambitions. He said the idea of making a large fortune did not appeal to him; he just wanted an ordinary home and simple comforts. He told me too, that when he believed he was right he stuck to a thing. I'd like to point out that all great men had that attitude."

In certain types of dementia praecox this idea of being always in the right and that others should know they were in the wrong is a very dangerous thing.

Claims No Jealousy

The accused man was not antisocial, but had told another interesting point, when he informed that he was no "joiner". He also would not join either Liberals or Conservatives or clubs or anything else. He gave as his reason that he had no wish to get up and deliver

Comparison With Gerald

The case history of Gerald (insane) and of the accused man approved many points in common, stated witness. The types, it was pointed out, were much the same.

Another thing that impressed the doctor was what he meant by the term 'friends' Accused considered the examining psychiatrists as "friends" which is not unusual in the case. The fact that the accused man had held ten different positions within the space of a few years proved that he had not been adaptable. The witness report carefully pointed out the various steps taken by Vermilyea during his earlier business life after College, finally suited, with car and all."

Gerald, the insane cousin, when his first symptoms appeared, complained of a pain in his back.

This was tyied as evidence yesterday.

Harold Vermilyea also complains of a pain in the back," declared witness proceeding step by step with his findings of the examination."

"I complained of my back and found a powerful braod on. It was what could be called a surgical brace, . . . I would call it hysterical. In this case it where there would be cases of a diseased spine . . . Crown Counsel objected—"Is this a mental or a physical disease. We're talking of . . . . .

"Just let me finish," "I'll get to it," replied Col. Greer as he continued.

Finds No Back Trouble

Witness said Vermilyea had complained of a serious illness in his back. "I put him through several bending tests and he went through them all right. Later I had an X-ray taken, but found nothing wrong; further examination disclosed that he had no disease he mentioned (hypertrophic osteo-arthritis)."

Vermilyea said that this condition would finally drive him insane," the doctor stated. This had been mentioned several times by Vermilyea.

Justice Jeffrey interrupted at this point by raising objections to going more definitely his medical phrases and names of diseases. The definition of the disease complained of was finally given.

Fear of Being Driven Insane

"This significant fact that he said it "would drive him insane." was carefully noted by you?" questioned Col. Greer, K.C.—Yes.

Q—Did he enlarge upon this question at all? A—No, it was just a bald statement.

Vermilyea had once been told by a doctor, that he had this disease it was revealed. Witness added that Vermilyea had apparently been suffering from a delusion as to this aspect. "But this is common in a paranoiac type," the doctor remarked.

Promotes to Exaggerations

"Does the paranoiac type always believe that he will go insane through illness?" asked the court. Witness explained this type was prone to exaggerate their illness.

The medical examination disclosed that Vermilyea was suffering from little other ailments than those found in a man of his age. Witness declared that Vermilyea regard to family matters taken by Vermilyea during his earlier business life after College.

His Marriage

Vermilyea had told of his marriage, with a hundred dollars or two between them, according to witness. The accused man had said he married and they had lived together for seventeen years. The divorce had occurred when some dispute over her putting some money in a house or estate proposition had arisen. Fitting in with the "chip on the shoulder" attitude of the accused, he did not speak to his wife for four weeks and subsequently divorced her on the plea of mental cruelty, the doctor commenting as a result of his conversation with Vermilyea. This point about accused mentioning that he was an impressive one, it was pointed out.

Accused Called "Paranoiac"

Vermilyea was described as a paranoiac. This type is a square peg in a round hole. Vermilyea finally got suited in accountancy when with the fruit company.

"He was in the position of being a little lord and had been eminently suited, with car and all."

Gerald, the insane cousin, when his first symptoms appeared, complained of a pain in his back.

This was tyied as evidence yesterday.

HER ARMS AND LEGS IMMOVABLE

Ten Years with Rheumatism

"To this woman it must have been like commencing to live a new life, when she began to use her arms and legs again, after ten years helpless for ten years.

"I suffered with rheumatism," she writes, "and had been bedridden since 1930. I could not move arms or legs and was like a baby in child. Everybody thought I should be an invalid all my life, I forced myself to fight against it, and tried a number of different things. It was Kruschen that finally saved me, and to-day I consider it is saved my life. My condition had greatly improved, and my limbs are gradually becoming more supple. Already I can eat without assistance, and dress myself—which I had not done for ten years," M. H.

Two of the ingredients of Kruschen Salts are the most effectual solvents of uric acid known to medical science, they actually dull the sharp edges of the painful crystals, then prevent them into a harmless solution. Other ingredients in these Salts have a stimulating effect upon the kidneys, that enables them to expel the dissolved uraic acid crystals through the natural channel.

10,000 BOY SCOUTS AT MELBOURNE JAMBOREE PROVIDE LESSON IN INTERNATIONALISM

Ten thousand boy scouts gathered at Melbourne, Australia, last December in a gigantic jamboree. They came from every part of the world and provided peace workers with an object lesson in the furthering of international understanding. A special meeting from King George, and the personal presence of world's chief scout, Lord Baden-Powell, were features of the jamboree. The above picture shows only a small section of the huge assembly at Melbourne stadium. Lord Baden-Powell is scheduled to visit Canada this spring.

WHITE TRILLIUM FLORAL EMBLEM

Chosen For Ontario at Meeting of Horticultural Society

Toronto, Feb. 21—(CP) — The white trillium, described as "a graceful demoratic flower that is entirely a blossom of peace," has been chosen as the floral emblem for Ontario, it was announced today at a meeting of the Ontario Horticultural Association. Other flowers suggested were the blue violet, the wild columbine, the white water-lily, the wild geranium and the wild rose.

Choice of the white trillium will be endorsed shortly by a bill being presented to the legislature, it was reported.

Its blooms freely throughout most of the province, and is known by its correct name to nearly everyone," said Prof. W. T. McClement of Kingston. "It is of good size and of graceful design and is so distinctive it is unlikely to be mistaken for any other flower.

"It is associated in our minds with the gladness and fresh hope of Spring. While emblems of many countries carry beaks, fangs, spines and thorns, suggestive of the need of defence and offence, Ontario's flower is entirely peaceful."

TREES THREATENED BY DUTCH ELM DISEASE

Believed Disease Firmly Established In New England States

Sarnia, Ont., Feb. 21 (CP)—Elm trees of New England States have been attacked by a disease that threatens the destruction of timber all over the North American continent, W. A. Dent of the Sarnia Collegiate Staff writes in a special article.

The infection is known as the Dutch elm disease because it attacks elms of all varities and was first observed in Holland. Mr. Dent states it is quite possible the disease is now too firmly established in the United States to be effectively eradicated. As far as is known the disease has not yet reached Canada.

Most readily noticed of the disease symptoms is the sudden wilting of leaves. "The spread of the disease is believed by European students to be caused by beetles though also by germs of fungus carried by the wind. The beetle is unknown in Canada. It is about one-eighth of an inch in length, and bores into the bark of the elm, feeding and breeding in the galleries formed.

There is no cure to the disease and Mr. Dent urges Canadians to watch for any symptoms and cut down any affected trees immediately.

WATER IS THE WAR SAYS ARMY CHAPLAIN

Soldiers Go Insane When Deprived of Their Water

Santiago, Chile, Feb. 21 (AP) — After 22 months as a Bolivian army chaplain in "green hell", the Rev. Father Luis Alberto Tapia is preparing to go back into the thick of it again.

"When I first went to the front" said the slim little priest today, "there were just three of us to minister to the whole Bolivian army in the Chaco. It was a tremendous responsibility. Our task was really threefold—we had to be nurses, preachers, and confessors to soldiers scattered over many kilometres of fighting front."

Father Tapia was ferried bodily out of the front lines when, with 6,500 Bolivian soldiers, he was captured by the Paraguayans at Camp Villa at the battle of Alihuatsi. The Paraguayan victory, as he described it, "managed to cut off the road to our water. Water is the war. You can put the strongest athlete beside a machine gun with plenty of ammunition and food but deny his water and see what happens."

"The first day he fights desperately. The second day the same. The third day he is not so good. The fourth day his strength fails him. By the fifth day he is through,

POSSIBILITY MAN WAS MURDERED

Found Lying in Pool of Blood on Kitchen Floor

Brantford, Ont., Feb. 21 (CP)—Possibility of murder was seen when the body of George Bilston, aged farmer, was found today in his home three miles south of Burtch and in Norfolk County with blood trickling from his head and indications he had met death with a severe blow over the head.

Ivan Jenkins, youth, was passing by the home about 10 o'clock this morning when he noticed smoke coming from the front of the one and a half storey house. He went to the door and knocked but received no answer. He called two farmers across the road, Walter Rand and John Allan, and they came over and made their way in. They found Bilston's body lying between the dining room and kitchen doors. The fire, whose smoke had been seen, was in the basement and the two extinguished it with pails of water standing in the cellar and with water from a nearby well. Crown Attorney W. N. Charlton, K.C., H. O. Wilson and city detective George Kerr responded to their call.

The locale is in Norfolk County and the case will be turned over to the Norfolk authorities, it is expected.

Milton lived a lonely life. There were no signs of a break-in and it is not known if there was anything missing.

The most striking feature of the case was that the hands and feet of Bilston were tied with light rope and cord. How the body came to be where found is a mystery.

The Brantford authorities have passed the case over to those of Norfolk County.

CANADIAN DAILY NEWSPAPER SERVICE

Says the Peterboro Examiner:

"The comment made by a speaker at the C. C. F. meeting the other night that you 'can't believe anything you read in the newspapers', makes the Examiner wonder whether this paper has not been wasting time and space in giving comprehensive reports of C. C. F. gatherings and the speeches made thereat.

"It is the firm belief of the Examiner that this country is excellently served by its press, that there is every effort on the part of newspapers to ensure the accuracy of what they print, and that in general tone and cleanliness Canadian journals can stand comparison with newspapers published anywhere."

More than that. The Canadian daily newspaper service is the best newspaper service in any country in the world.

We venture to use the Peterboro Examiner's utterance as a text on which to offer some illustration of something which the people of this country are not generally aware, namely, that their newspapers give the fairest, the most impartial, news service in the world—and, as regards purely Canadian news, the most complete as well as the most impartial service that is given in any country in the world by its press of the news of that country.

A big claim, this, is it not?

Let us specify.

The daily newspapers of Canada are all banded together in a joint national news service. There are ninety-four daily newspapers in Canada. Ninetyfour of these, in short, all Canadian dailies, are members of an association called Canadian Press. Canadian Press is a joint stock company. Each Canadian daily paper, big or little, from Atlantic to Pacific, has one share of stock. The object of this company is to collect and distribute telegraphic and cable news to each member. For this purpose, the company mantains a head office in Toronto under a general manager, Mr. J. F. B. Livesay, and operates a vast system of telegraph wires. The general manager has complete control, subject to instructions of the board of directors of the company; he appoints correspondents and telegraph operators throughout Canada and directs and controls all collection and distribution of joint telegraphic news.

The instructions of the company to the general manager are blunt and specific. They may be summarized as follows, in effect:

"We, the daily papers of Canada, are banded to collect and interchange news. We want all the proper news that can be got; 'all the news that is fit to print.' We want it impartial. We represent all shades of political opinion, all shades of Canadian opinion racial or religious, commercial or industrial; therefore, no bias of any kind must be permitted to color the news you send us. You must give us only the straight goods, without fear or favor."

Each daily paper in Canada helps in this by giving the correspondents of Canadian Press free run in its office—access to all its news, with the stipulation only that any special news it has shall not be communicated to a competitor in the same city. For instance, the Canadian Press correspondent in Ottawa can come into The Joural office at any time and get any Ottawa news (or any other special news) The Journal has. If it is news that is of interest outside Ottawa, the correspondent can send it to the head office of Canadian Press in Torono to be distributed throughout the Dominion; but he must not give it to the Citizen here, nor must Canadian Press send it back to the Citizen. Similarly with Ottawa or special news that the Citizen may have, but not The Journal. A similar condition prevails for every city; but barring this one prohibition, every daily in Canada gives Canadian Press correspondents free run of its office and its news, local or special.

Supplementing a complete and impartial Canadian news service, Canadian news service, Canadian Press maintains special correspondents in London, Paris, Washington and New York, all under the same instruction of impartiality and maintains relations for exchange of cable and telegraph news with the American Associated Press and the leading British cable agency, Reuters.

The board of directors of Canadian Press is 21 in number, elected at an annual meeting of all shareholders, alias a representative on an equal footing of each of the daily papers of Canada, big or little. Size or wealth of a newspaper does not count; neither does politics. As a matter of fact, of the present board of directors about one-third represent newspapers of Conservative leaning in politics; about another third, Liberal; and the remaining third more or less independent in politics. The object is business; namely, to get all the news as cheaply as possible; and, necessarily, seeing that all shades of politics and opinions are acting together to get it impartial. It isn't altogether cheap. For instance, in Ottawa the three dailies here, The Journal, the Citizen and Le Droit, pay Canadian Press close to fifty thousand dollars a year. The cost in each city or town in Canada is levied by assessment made by the board of directors of Canadian Press, varying according to population or to the circulation of the newspapers. The total assessment levied last year on Canadian dailies by Canadian Press was $635,167. But the same amount and quality of news, if collected by individual newspapers in the Dominion without the agency of Canadian Press would have cost millions.

Any daily paper in the Dominion which has the means and the will can maintain special correspondents anywhere; and many of the larger daily papers maintain special correspondents in Ottawa and in some of the other large cities in Canada or abroad. Canadian Press has nothing to do with these; and if any of these happen, consciously or unconsciously, to color news, Canadian Press can't help it. Neither has Canadian Press any control over editorial columns. But obviously, when a vast organization like Canadian Press is continuously at work collecting and distributing all proper news, and always as far as humanly possible fair news, truthful news, unbiased news, news which even biased special correspondents or biased editorial columns must reckon with the harm which can be done by wilful or prejudiced misrepresentation by a special correspondent or a partisan editorial page becomes slight.

There is no such organization as Canadian Press elsewhere in the world. The nearest approach is the American Associated Press; but that covers only a part of the United States daily press. The Canadian Press is the only complete national newsgathering organization in the world—and for the reasons which we have specified it is an extremely competent as well as impartial organization. The people of this country can therefore feel tolerably assured of three things in connection with their daily newspapers: First, that they probably get all news that is worth while and fit to print; secondly, that when the news appears under the line "Canadian Press", it is as honest and impartial as human limitations permit; thirdly, that Canadian newspaper men, whose ability, foresight and mutual tolerance have pioneered to this condition, are rather likely to be otherwise running their business pretty decently.—Ottawa Journal.

NEW VALUE IN COLD

What does the average man, indeed every man and woman who is not a scientist know about cold? Everything of course, they know what it feels like to suffer from stinging blast or to have icy waves pass through the house when a door is opened, they know what it means to have to wear warm clothes.

Yet the scientist who experiences the same cold has also another point of contact with cold—the scientific contact which goes almost to absolute zero on the Kelvin scale. That is not known to the average man. But the scientist does not suffer cold when he is digging down to absolute zero. It is an experiment he is performing. He is not hurrying home across a waste commons or along a street facing the bitter snowstorm; he is in the laboratory testing.

Prof. W. J. de Haas and others in Leyden University have reached within fivethousandths of a degree of absolute zero on the Kelvin scale. How important this experimentation is, one has to be told. It is this—the professor has caught a glimpse of a strange, dead, motionless world, which when it is thoroughly explored will clarify that in which we live and probably place in the hands of the physicist and engineer new technical weapons for the conquest of matter. It was twenty-one years ago that Prof. Kamerlingh Onnes, of Leyden, made the discovery that when mercury and lead are chilled to the temperature of liquid helium, they suddenly become "super conductive", which means that a current started at low temperature keeps on flowing even after the dynamo or the battery has been disconnected. There is no heating, no loss of voltage so long as the temperature is maintained. So with the magnetic properties of metals. They are utterly different from those with which physicists are familiar under ordinary conditions. Here is what the New York Times writer sees as possible:

Conductors in which electric currents will flow without any resistance, cities illuminated by generators that can be carried on an automobile, fantastic as they now seem, it is barely possible that they may be commonplaces to Mr. Gradgrind's grandchildren if ever a way is discovered of freezing helium at a cost not much greater than that of producing ice cubes in the kitchen refrigerator.

"Heat has always been synonymous with activity, cold with stagnation and death. We see water passing with the aid of heat from stonelike ice to the liquidity of a lake and to the violence of steam under pressure. We behold insects reduced by cold to inertness, and restless gases to brittle lumps and flakes. Why should this be? We have but to ask the question to grasp the significance of the work that the physicists are doing, ignoring the while problems which worry us and which seem trivial indeed compared with that greater problem, which is nature."

CLOSE AKIN

I have never met Joy
Walking down the street;
But I'd know the movements
Of her dancing feet.
She would come as you do,
Lightly as a cloud,
She would slip like sunbeams
Through the weaving crowd.

I have never heard Joy
Calling in my ear;
But I know her voice must
Ring like yours does, dear,
With a silver cadence
Deeper, far, than mirth,
Sweeter than the sweetest
Music made on Earth!

Joy may be a pagan,
Joy may be a sprite,
Yet I know you share her
Infinite delight.
Since the day you came to
Dwell my heart within,
I have known that Joy and
You are close akin!

FIFTY YEARS AGO February 16, 1885, Mark Twain (Samuel L. Clemens), and George W. Cable, well known Southern author of the period, gave readings in various Ontario cities in the course of an international tour they were making. They were accompanied by Col. Pond, a celebrated manager of lecturers and other celebrities of that time. It will be remembered that Mark Twain embarked in the publishing business in Hartford, Connecticut, and sunk the family fortune in it. He faced the future penniless but unafraid, and made a lecture tour of the world, the financial returns of which were sufficient to put him on "Easy Street" again. According to popular history Mark Twain kept away from the publishing end of the book business after that. Hannibal, Missouri, is celebrating the Mark Twain Centennial beginning with official lighting of the beacon in the Mark Twain Memorial Lighthouse on Cardiff Hill, overlooking the Mississippi, on January 15, accompanied by a radio program in which various dignitaries took part. In May there will be a "Tom Sawyer Day" celebrated, also a "Mark Twain Day". Then there will be the dedication of the Mark Twain Memorial, followed on June 18, 19, 20 by the "Mark Twain Centennial Pageant". September 9-14 is set aside for "Mark Twain Homecoming." There will be other special days leading right up to December. While Hannibal is celebrating the Mark Twain Centennial, the author was not born there. He spent his boyhood in Hannibal and Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn undoubtedly were born there, as well as Becky Thatcher. Mark Twain's Cave, near Hannibal has been preserved as a memorial and show place, also his boyhood home, with a replica of the highboard fence where that whitewashing epic was staged. Then of course there is the grand old Mississippi River and that island where the boy pirates had their greatest thrill. One of the sights of Hannibal is a splendid statue of Tom and Huck in their regulation summer togs, apparently starting out on one of their great adventures. Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn will never die because they have counterparts in every community, and can be found on most any summer vacation day beside the old swimmin' hole, barelegged, scantily clothed as behooves those roughing it in the great outdoors, and weaving wonderful dreams of the great world that lies just beyond the horizon and the great part they are destined to play in it. As a matter of course Mark Twain will live also, just as long as his creations in Tom and Huck live, and that will be until real live, flesh and blood out-of-door boys go out of fashion and only lads with fine boots and Lord Fauntleroy suits offend the landscape. Then will begin the decadence of man—and the end of all things is not far off.

Letters to the Editor

YOUTH SPEAKS

Editor, Ontario Intelligencer,—

Once more we are nearing a Federal election which should be of vital interest to every voter throughout the Dominion of Canada.

I am a chap in my twenty-first year. I have been working home on the farm with my father for the last two years. I have seen the interests of the farmer gradually depreciating. It is terrible to see large farms which contain the finest soil and up-to-date equipment gradually falling to pieces. Taxation is becoming impossible to many farmers, because the farmers' expenses are exceeding their income.

I notice our Government is talking of giving 4 per cent. interest on Government loans that is the first step to help the farmer. But still there are farmers, who own their farms, going behind every day. There's something wrong and we can't blame it all on the Government of our country. We must take some of the blame on our own shoulders. For instance when the Government established a good market for our hogs in Great Britain, we were getting good prices for pork. But the farmer has grown careless and would feed the pigs anything and everything and our Canadian standard of bacon became very low and thus we lost a great percentage of our sale to Great Britain and today Danish bacon is helping to replace ours. Now we may be exporting bacon but to a very small extent. This is only one example which I have proven to you, most any product on the farm can be examined with the same test and we find the same result. It goes to show the consumer demands satisfaction. Therefore, I say the farmers should produce first class products and demand higher prices, but the way things are today the farmer has to sell his produce whether he wants to or not, because he has his payments to make. Therefore, some one has got to act for us.

Farming is a basis of a country's success; we are not "hicks or hayseeds" as citizens say, but we are monarchs, who are fighting this hard depression with the greatest of hardships. To prove it, we are the only organization which is doing such and keeping our mouths shut.

I am a youth and I want youth to think of farming as something worth while. I know we are not encouraged very much these days, but we have to step out and see that the farmers get a square deal.

We are the organization who can bring back prosperous times but we have to organize. We cannot wait and expect to receive.

I notice great criticism of the government throughout our country today, but how many representations have we sent to the Government during the past five years. Can you expect a Member of Parliament to come to your door and ask if he could help you? No. We have to come to our member and tell him how things are going in the county and when the Member knows the county is behind him, he will receive greater consideration at Ottawa. I hope we people look at that fact with greater interest.

Our Member of Parliament is just a representative we as a body tell him our difficulties and he represents us in Ottawa. Therefore we should take our problems which concern the welfare of the county to our Member and he in turn will ask for advice and consideration in Ottawa.

Now, we farmers have got to have greater prices for our produce, thus the country requires markets or consumption of some kind, therefore men have to be employed in order to pay for the produce which they consume. But in order to produce markets and release unemployment, it is going to take money. Therefore we've got to have a backer.

The Government should take a chance on the farmers and here is the chance they should take. That they will find markets for our produce. Therefore the farmer's produce should come up to a standard that is a satisfying standard which satisfies the consumer and when such a standard is put in force in our country we will be able to find markets in other countries. The Government should set prices on all farmer's produce to stop these bantering buyers and keep men from undermining each other. You would be surprised with the outcome of such a change.

It would encourage the farmer to grow more produce and cattle. It would encourage youth to stick to the farm; it would enable farmers to hire men; it would encourage the wealthy to take in mortgages and unemployed men would be tempted to rent farms when prices are more encouraging. When such times occur we can think about the abolition of the dole system.

As a youth here is my suggestion, "That the Government set a standard price on all farmers' produce and that the farmers' produce must come up to a certain standard. The Government should further adjust the tariffs of our country so as these big stores cannot undermine our farmers by buying and shipping in from other countries. The way the farmers are going on today is no good and I'm sure someone has got to offer some suggestions.

lleuoncsr: -i ekhe aW,-ma .

I am against free-trade because nations would use this country for a dump for their surplus produce. Then we would receive nothing for our produce and we couldn't establish any foreign markets and if we did we would have to get rid of this dump produce and thus would spoil markets for Canadian produce.

The farmers during the past few years have been a bank for the country. To look at our township's expenses for one year, makes us hesitate and wonder that four hundred years ago, this place was a woods where only Indians dwelt. But still we have to go on and work under a heavy burden. The farmer has gone practically as far as he can go, but still he keeps his mouth shut.

I hope the youth of our country are growing up with a suggesting conscience and a spirit and will power to fulfil, so as we may change these times which confront us today. It's not the older people who should worry, but we and surely you'll help lighten our future burden.

While passing I would like to mention something about our railroads. The railroad has been the system which has helped make Canada a country. It is the system which should be patronized by every man and woman, every store and factory in order to keep it in operation. They built their own roads, through hardships and discouragements. It took many years to put this railroad through our country. It's mighty nice to see the developments of our railroad from the time of Sir John A. Macdonald and they should be protected by some source.

The large trucks are killing the railroads; one of the big locomotives costs more than a dozen trucks. The truck drivers kick I know, but if the railroad was in full working order again it would employ practically double the number of truck drivers. The truck drivers never had to build the highways. We're all paying for them, but who is wearing them out. Can we let the country lose its pride for the sake of a few trucks.

Now friends, I am only a youth, perhaps you think these problems are not ours but we're the boys who have to fight these times in two or three years.

Therefore, my sympathy is with the farmer, the laborer and the railroad and as long as these three forces remain not working, Canada will no longer prosper.

Thanks for this valuable space in your paper, I remain,

Raymond Franklin Thompson,

Hookwood Sanitarium, Kingston, was on the stand and gave testimony in regard to the condition of a young man named Gerald Vermilyea, now confined in the institution as a mentally ill person. Evidence was given by Dr. Cumberland of conversations with the sisters of Gerald in reference to his state.

During the progress of his mental illness the brother became more irritational and worried more. Upon his admission to the hospital he did not remember the names of doctors or nurses. His orientation was very poor; his memory retained school knowledge of many points, but it lapsed badly upon others. Insight was such that he believed that he was being held over to be "fattened up and to rest his nerves."

Old Greer took the witness through and extended period of questioning.

Throughout the recital of topics related to sanity and mental observation accused sat, head in hand, with eyes partly closed, leaning on the dock.

From a sheet of paper held in his hand, Old Greer read short portions (testimony given by witness. Point by point the actions already related of the ill brothers were corroborated by witness, constantly referring to the files in front of him as the questioning progressed.

Coughs, sneezes and sniffs rattled through the court as the methodical plodding questions were asked and replied to.

No Knowledge of One

"Of Fred you have no knowledge? asked Col. Greer. "No personal knowledge," pointed out witness. Fred died in June 16, 1934.

An aunt had died in menopause, it was brought out. This condition might have, in a sense, been responsible said the medical witness. Justice Jeffrey questioned regarding the term "menopause". Many of these people in these institutions are merely in the stage of senile decay; not all people confined are insane? A. No.

96 Year Old on Stand

Hobbling slowly to the stand, leaning heavily upon a cane, Mrs. Westcheson, the next witness reaching far over the railing of the witness stand to catch the words of the sheriff, swearing him in. Her address was at 96 last May. Examination taken up by Mr. C. J. Payne, K.C., was conducted with her face pressed against witness' left ear. In his slow and clearly enunciated sentences he often repeated questions of Mr. Payne, witness related events of his early knowledge of the Vermilyea family.

Family Successful

Witness under questioning of the defence related that his mother, Jane Jones had lost her mind when about 40 years old. A sister, Phoebe Robertson had drowned herself. With a chart of the family tree in his hand, Mr. Payne took the ancestry from early date.

Q. What happened to Mary Garrett? A. I never heard of anything. She was a fine woman.

Q. Do you know how she came to her death? A. No.

Mr. Payne took the witness.

Q. Solomon Vermilyea had a big family. A. Yes, nine.

Q. And they were all successful. A. Yes.

Witness said that when his mother had lost her mind, she had recovered after two years, but not for just before she died, she had lost it again. During this period she was described as being "peculiar". Living history of early families in the district. She could, however, recalled old familiar names with unusual clarity of mind. Following the battle hearing he was assisted from the stand. Adjournment at this point was called for afternoon recess.

Family History

Court resumed following recess with the presentation of a chart, part the evidence of Emma Vermilyea. It was read from a typewritten copy by Mr. Payne. This deposition had been taken by Mr. Payne and Mr. Urquhart some time previously. In the document it was stated that Mrs. Vermilyea had known Harold Paine an hour after he was born. Much of the evidence referred to early family history. Reuben Vermilyea father-in-law, was spoken of in the deposition as a man, who had always been kindly and quiet except for periods, when he suffered great pain from rheumatism. "He imagined he saw spirits and ghosts around the house." However, these attacks were of mild nature and did little more than frighten the family. Thomas Vermilyea, a brother of Nathaniel became very insane, and was violent upon occasions. He had peculiar actions, but had never really inspired fear. Witness stated that he was much like Reuben, kind and quiet and of the visionary type.

Often these visions took the shape, of a hallucination regarding a pot of money. "He was always seeing money-kegs of it. He said he had chests of it down in the swamp." As the mental illness progressed his actions became more aggressive; he became violent and troublesome.

Morbid at Times

Sarah Moynes, Nathaniel's sister, was violently morbid, especially while conceived. Finally "she ended it all in Moira River." At one time she wanted Mrs. Vermilyea to pray for her child because she feared she might hurt him while in a spell.

Karl Moynes was also a suicide, said witness. Delilah Reid, "was peculiar at times. She became childish or senile", Mary Garrett, a sister of Nathaniel was not of well known personality, witness pointed out.

Under cross-examination it was revealed, that Emma Vermilyea was 78 years. Reuben Vermilyea, a father-in-law, was in the 70's when he died. It was believed by her that he became violent only because he was locked up. Reuben had two children.

Q.—Was he a religious man. A.—Practically no; he was a Quaker and we always heard lots of praying in the house.

Harry P. Brown of Upland, California, called as a witness in depositions taken at California, for defence, a manager of a citrous fruit packing house, and who knew accused well for three years, said in the typed document read by Defence Attorney O. B. Smith, he had never observed any peculiarities with regard to Harold Vermilyea, except that while employed by the packing house, he was "very nervous and very forgetful".

"Along in the fall of 1934", continued witness, "I observed, that he was very anxious to regain work in the office. I called at his home a few days before October 4th, 1934. He was persistent in going to work. He was depressed. There were times he got up and left the room, while I was talking to him. He gave no apologies for the actions."

It was declared accused's actions could be described as imporfune.

Inclined to Stutter

When Vermilyea became nervous he was inclined to stutter. During the fall of 1934, his nervousness appeared to increase. His memory became poor—he made notes and when he did even then he forgot things, it was sworn.

"I often gave him orders and he very often forgot them," the deposition read.

Q.—Would you say that at this time he was an insane person . . . ? This question had been objected to at the hearing and also by the Crown in Court on Thursday, Mr. J. H. Smith, defence counsel, conciliated.

The cross-examination was read by Mr. Donnan;

"On September first, Vermilyea had called at his office," said witness under the cross-examination. He said he had to get work. I believe he left Ontario, California, soon after." (The approximate date of his departure, said the deposition, was fixed by dates of a growers' meeting in the company of other. This was placed not too closely by witness as about the end of September or the first of October.

The re-examination taken at the same hearing by Mr. King, was examined by Mr. Smith, defence counsel. It was noted, that the impediment in accused's speech was more frequently observed, when he was mad or nervous.

Q.—(Was he a representative)—Was he a hot tempered man to your knowledge? A.—Yes.

Thomas Dale Pittenger, of Ontario, California, an Inspector of the General Electric Company, had known accused for four years. He had been associated with him at "Pastime Club", where billiards were often played by him with Vermilyea. Other at times when Vermilyea would lay down the cue and walk away without saying a word, said witness, "He never made a comment when he left in the middle of the game. Next day he might be all right or again he would be quiet for a few days. He never would become very angry over things. He'd get up from the table and his face would get livid. One time during a game he stopped and said, let's have a drink, a coke". Then for no apparent reason, while we were drinking he said, you're just a degenerate'. Then for two weeks or so he didn't speak. When he did come around again he began by the arm and say 'kiddo" or "Scout" or some such and have a game".

Witness also said that once in Bullock's Ice Angeles' store, when he was purchasing a tie he tried on dozens of them, then he walked out without buying any.

Worse in Late 1934

During the latter part of 1934 "he got worse", said witness. He became more free with foul language and would blow up more often. When he got in a temper or was excited he stammered," said witness.

At this point the answer to question No. 27 was allowed—

"I have always thought him one of the queerest men I ever knew," witness had replied.

A second question attempted by Mr. Donnan was ruled out and finally the whole page upon request of defence.

In the re-direct examination witness said that on occasions when Vermilyea had stalked from the billiard game, "his eyes glazed, there was a curious, livid look about his face and it was plainly evident that he was angry."

Court was adjourned by Mr. Justice Jeffery at this time until 9.30 a.m. Friday.

HENRY DISAVOWED BY HEIGHINGTON IN HOUSE DEBATE

Says Opposition Leaders Not Speaking For All Members

REJECTS MOTION

Premier Forced to Disclose Confidential Matter by Kidd's Move

Toronto, Feb. 22—(CP)—Political observers in Ontario today sought a precedent for sharp skirmishes between Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn, ex-Premier George S. Henry and T. A. Kidd, former Speaker, on the first day the Province's Legislators settled down to regular business.

The first, between the Premier and Mr. Kidd, Conservative, Kingston, arose over the propriety of a resolution introduced by ex-Speaker before the orders of the day were called yesterday bringing down to the King in anticipation of His Majesty's Silver Jubilee. Mr. Kidd said the Speech from the Throne contained no reference to the event.

Another sharp disagreement followed a statement by the leader of the opposition, saying Bishop the deceased members he said the death of J. R. Cooke, former Hydro Commission Chairman, "was more or less connected with the inquiry he was attending." (The Ablitti probe.)

Premier Hepburn refused Mr. Kidd's motion, explaining he and two members of the Cabinet had conferred with Lieutenant-Governor Herbert A. Bruce regarding Silver Jubilee plans and there was referred to the Governor-General of Canada, the Earl of Bessborough, desired no premature publicity.

Question of Privilege

Mr. Hepburn made no answer to the former Premier's reference to Mr. Cooke's death until two Government members, W. L. Houck, Niagara Falls, and Hon. E. Lapierre, Sudbury, had made speeches moving and seconding the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Then the Premier arose on two questions of privilege. "So long as I am leader of the Government I am going to observe the little minutes or public life," he said and accused Mr. Kidd of lack of courtesy in introducing the resolution without informing the government of his contemplated action.

"As a result I had to disclose information, which had to have been kept confidential," he continued. "I want to put the blame where it belongs—on members of the Opposition," he added.

Turning to Mr. Henry's statement about the former Hydro Chairman's death, the Premier said, "we tried to pay tribute to one of your departed members but the leader of the Opposition either from cheap politics or lack of knowledge referred to his death as resulting from an inquiry he was at."

He read press clippings announcing the death of Mr. Cooke as the result of an automobile accident last August.

Asks Withdrawal

"I hope that if I am killed on the way to St. Thomas the next leader of the Government, whoever he might be, will not blame Opposition members," he added.

It would be "a gentlemanly gesture," he asked Mr. Henry to withdraw his statement.

Intervening, Mr. Kidd explained his motion was "not an expression of loyalty in the Jubilee Year" and he was not seeking revelation of secrets.

Refusing to withdraw his statement, Mr. Henry pressed to know the Premier "the real facts" about Mr. Cooke's death.

"Following a gruelling examination by certain counsel appointed by the Government he was suffering almost a physical collapse and the accident was very directly associated with the inquiry," he said.

Then Wilfrid Heighington, Conservative, Toronto-St. David, said the Premier should not direct his remarks to the Opposition as a whole but "each member must assume responsibility for his, own words."

W. L. Houck of Niagara Falls Refers to Coming Legislation

NET DEBT GIVEN

Praises Department of Municipal Affairs For Progress

Toronto, Feb. 22—(CP)—Covering the broad field of Ontario governmental activities and referring to projected legislation, William L. Houck, Niagara Falls, in the Ontario Legislature moved the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

It was the start of the session's first debate and Mr. W. L. Houck placed before the legislature the record of the Liberal administration since it was elected in the provincial general election last June 19.

After reviewing the various departments he declared while each has its own vital problem the main question of the day is unemployment. With a view to stimulating industry he suggested lifting of heavy taxes on primary industries.

He paid tribute to the late Theodore Leguil, Winnipeg, the late Premier Sifton, South Wellington, two Liberals elected in the June election, and to the late Hon. J. C. Cooke, former chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

Premier Congratulated

After congratulating Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn on his victory and Norman O. Hipel on his election as Speaker, Mr. Houck proceeded with his analysis of the various government departments.

He thought the government's records of rapid achievement was exemplified by the newly-elected department of Municipal Affairs. Nobody, the department was established to rescue municipalities from financial chaos he said when the province had suffered many municipalities were in default and others on the verge of it.

"These municipalities became the special concern of the new department," he said. "It has been taken into its own hands the control exercised hitherto by the supervisory committee and it has sought to administer municipal finance in the interests not only of the bondholders but of the municipality and of the taxpayers as a whole."

He then referred to the government's relief activity and institution of the cash relief policy in which nearly 75 municipalities are participating.

Net Debt $358,477,000

"The gross debt at the end of October was $955,761,000," he said. "Of this amount $597,284,000 is an increase of $145,899,000 since 1930," he said.

Mr. Houck found encouragement in the increase of revenue from Nov. 1 to Jan. 31 of this year when the increase over the corresponding months of 1933-34 was $2,500,000.

Referring to the government's announced intention of freeing counties from contributing the former 20 percent to highway costs, he said the government is being pressed to add considerable mileage to the system.

"Principally because of this pressure the Department of Highways is obliged to make a study of the possibility of assuming the entire provincial mileage, leaving the balance of the mileage, aside from Northern development with the municipalities," he said.

Attract Tourists

Reduction of interest on farm loans from five to four percent, announced in the fall and in the Speech from the Throne, caused Mr. Houck to declare the Ontario Government had led Federal and other governments in relieving the farmers of their interest burden.

Minister for a tourist and hydro centre, Mr. Houck referred to greater efforts to attract tourists to the Province and mentioned the Dionne quintuplets as an attraction. Then he considered the undertaking of Hydro properties in Niagara Falls, Removal of the Ontario Power and Toronto Power Companies from the city tax rolls had a serious effect on municipal financing, he said, and a special arrangement was under consideration whereby Hydro made a contribution to the city treasury instead of paying taxes. This has been $50,000 annually but announcement has been made that Hydro-Electric Power Commission will pay the city of Niagara Falls and adjoining townships only the amount for taxes required by law. This will mean withdrawal of $30,000 and "will so cripple a municipality in its financing operations as to bring about a condition approaching insolvency," Mr. Houck declared.

Praise came from the Speaker for the work of the Milk Control Board and he thought actual results of its work indicated much construc-

He congratulated George A. Henry leader of the Opposition and the members of the party who survived the general election.

She Never Cared Till Now

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Petting, drinking and smoking parties never appealed to me, and I was considered old-fashioned or a "wet blanket." I'm 19 years old. Now, I've met a man with whom I have fallen in love, really in love. I have never gone out with him, but have seen him whenever I visited the office where he and his brother-in-law worked. They were very good friends.

Now she doesn't work there any more, and I never see him. I've tried to forget him, but that's impossible. Please advise.

Unhappy.

As the young man and your sister-in-law are very good friends, why don't you get her to arrange a little party and invite you both? Nothing is easier to arrange than a Sunday night supper, and it's so inexpensive and informal.

His Family Pays No Attention to Him

Dear Miss Fairfax:

We've been married 24 years, and I have always been an indulgent husband and father, and still give my wife my entire pay envelope every week. I leave home at three P. M. and do not return from work until four P. M. and naturally would like a little companionship from my wife and family when I return.

But things have changed since my married daughter and her husband have made their home with us. My wife and these two girls together and ignore me completely. I'm never included in the conversation, and feel heartbroken at their indifference. Also, I am very much Disgusted.

Judging entirely from your side of the case, it seems to me as if you are being treated pretty badly in your own home.

Do your daughter and her husband pay extravagant board? If so, your wife may be overdoing the role of anxiously agreeable landlady. Why not keep something out of your weekly pay envelope and treat yourself to a movie occasionally, as you seem to have little companionship at home? Also, this may bring them around.

Parents Agreed to Two Dates, But No More

Dear Miss Fairfax:

At 16 I was allowed to go to my first party, and I met the grandest young man, who liked me right off. He made a date with me for the next day, and I couldn't get out of it. I was so afraid mother wouldn't let me keep it. Now, I've met a man with whom I have fallen in love, really in love. I have never gone out with him, but have seen him whenever I visited the office where he and his brother-in-law worked. They were very good friends.

Now she doesn't work there any more, and I never see him. I've tried to forget him, but that's impossible. Please advise.

Air the Hair To Keep It Beautiful

Make This a Part of the Nightly Beauty Chore, Advises Expert (The Beauty Box)

Mary Brian

Whose soft, lovely hair glows with vibrant health.

By HELEN FOLLETT

One good beauty slogan is "Shake your mane". Give your beauty crown the air, friction the scalp until it glows. Fingers and air all well and good. They make the perfection in the mirror perfectly. But having locks plastered down flat all the time isn't good for their health.

Slip the finger tips up or the long undulation. No need of disturbing it so that it will wilt. Rub the flesh briskly, moving the scalp from place to place. This should be a nightly beauty chore.

Before the shampoo, give the silky strands a rousing currying with a stiff-bristled brush. This treatment tugs on the hair roots, revives and revitalizes tiny blood streams that nourish them. Be kind to your scalp and your hair will be glossy, display a pleasing disposition.

Teeth that are not strictly up to par are enhanced by the use of a brilliant, vivid lipstick. Use a natural tint if the little fangs are no longer ivory white. Not because of lack of care do they turn yellow, but because of changes in the dentine.

Most unfortunate of them all are the suffer from color fear. A world of beauty riches is theirs for the taking. Instead of seeking rich, flattering colors, they stick continually to dismal gray and drabs, unattractive brown tones. After a time they themselves grow colorless.

Every woman, even if she is sixty, should have a red hat. It does wonderful pick up work on days when the world seems to be going round the wrong way and the human race is a disappointment.

Pipe stem legs are a common beauty grievance. Pill them out by running upstairs, doing high kicking exercises, riding or by tennis shoes slowly.

It is doubtful if massage will be of benefit. One has to build bigger muscles, and the only way to do that is to give muscles plenty of hard work to do. A five-mile walk each day will do the business in a few months' time.

Fashion Flashes

Copyright, 1935,

A life saver for an old but still good tweed suit or wool sports dress is a set consisting of a wide belt and bag, both of the cut-out dlle leather with square gold metal buckles.

Rejoice to learn that your favorite simple little shirt-maker sports frock that was in fashion at all last year is now offered in a new washable wool that is feather-light and charming.

It isn't easy to tell the difference between evening frocks and the new nighties, as alike are they. A very deceiving model is a nighty with hight neck, deep decollete in back and puffed sleeves, as well as an Empire silhouette. It comes in tearose or light blue; a monogram embroidered above the curve of the high waist makes it really a nightie.

In your hands you should hold a handsome evening bag to complete a perfect evening costume. For a blue dress there is a handsome bag in pale blue satin covered with clusters of rhinestone studs interspersed with simulated pearls.

A whisper falls us that stiffy, heavy fabrics are said to be going out and that most of the smartest evening frocks for Spring will be of delicate chiffons, lace or tulle. An advance model is Patou's dark brown lace gown patterned in silver threads and worn over a dark brown satin slip. Two winged ruffles cascade down the back; the belt is of brown calfskin with a huge crystal clip in back.

Down South women are wearing little capes made of satin and lace in honeycomb fashion. These are usually fitted over the shoulders and have revers down the front.

How long before the wedding should the gift be sent, and how should it be sent?

U.

Send the gift as soon as you wish. The wedding gift should be sent about two weeks before the date of the wedding, or ten days before. This is so that the bride-to-be will be given time to write her thank-you notes before she leaves on her trip.

SPOON or FORK

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. When eating a dish of fresh berries, should you use a spoon or a fork?

2. At an informal dinner, when your individual salad is placed with the main course, should you rest your salad fork on the salad plate, or on the dinner plate with the other knife and fork, while you are eating the salad?

B.

1. Use a spoon when eating berries.

2. Rest your salad fork on your salad plate.

HOSPITAL NOTE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me what to write to a lady who is in the hospital after a serious operation? I have known her for some time, but I am just a school girl, and I hardly know what to write that would be appreciated.

T.

Dear Mrs. Brownley:

I do so much want to have you know how very much you have been in my thoughts during these days in which you have been in the hospital, and I want to send you my very dearest wishes that your improvement will be very complete and speedy. I am so sorry to hear that you had to go through such a serious operation, but I am sure that it is all over and that you are now successfully convalescing. Our prayers are with you, and our friendliest wishes.

Most sincerely yours,

NEIGHBORHOOD CALL

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Will you please tell me about a person making the first call after moving on a new street — what to make and when they come in, and when they leave? And should I thank them for calling? 2. How soon should you return the call

Subscriber.

1. Always the hostess greets the guest with a handclasp and shakes hands too when the guest leaves, whether the guest is a woman or a man. And the gracious hostess too always says some words of appreciation of the visit, "Good-bye, Mrs. Allen. It was delightful of you to come", or "Thank you so much for coming, Mrs. Allen. It has been such a pleasure to see you and I do hope that you will come again very soon."

2. Such a call should be returned within about ten days or two weeks. Postponing such an important "return call" for a longer time than this detracts from its enthusiasm.

NO HELP NECESSARY

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am a young woman twenty-six years of age. I live with my family and we have no maid. When a young man comes to call on me, should I take his hat and coat, and, when he is leaving, shall I help him with his coat?

Enthusiastic Reader.

A woman does not take a man's hat and coat when he arrives, but she doesn't help him on with his coat when he goes. If there is a clothes closet in the entrance hall of her home, she opens the door of it and says to the young man, "Won't you put your hat and coat there. A man wants to be given the privilege of taking care of his own hat and coat. He doesn't want to be made to feel helpless. And practically the same thing applies when he is leaving. he gets his hat and coat, and he puts on his coat, unassisted. If he is assisted, he doesnt like it. It's unsapplied, and inappropriate service on the girl's part.

"We're thrilled ... the way it cuts down RUNS!"

High-School Girls everywhere start "PROVE-IT-YOURSELF" CLUBS

Try their plan—you'll cut down costly RUNS

THRILLING NEWS . . . this all-over-the-country campaign to cut down stocking runs! High-school girls prove it—cut down 64%!

No guesswork about these results, either—the girls actually proved them. Each girl took two pairs of stockings, washed one pair after each wearing with Lux, rubbed the other with cake-soap. Luxed stockings showed 64% less runs!

Why not try this prove-it-yourself idea? Lux cuts down runs by saving stocking elasticity.

Soaps with harmful alkali and cake-soap rubbing weaken elasticity—then the silk tends to break, instead of giving under strain. Lux has no harmful alkali!

HIGH-SCHOOL GIRLS MAKE STOCKING TEST

MARJORIE COOGAN writes: "26 days without one single run in my Lux stockings! I'm hard on stockings, too! The ones I rubbed with cake soap popped a run the 6th day. What money Lux saves me!"

JEANETTE BERRY writes: "The third day I wore the stockings I'd rubbed with cake soap—zip! went a run! Lux is keen way to make stockings wear longer—it cut my runs down 78%!"

LUX saves Stocking Elasticity

LUX

LUX FOR MEN'S SOCKS

Man's socks suffer, too, from harsh soaps or cake-soap rubbing. Woolknits object to the protest! Why take chances? It's much easier and safer to use Lux socks and they'll wear far longer. A book better, 'eh?

IN MEMORIAM

STIMSON—In loving memory of our dear mother and father who passed away fourteen years ago.

We cannot forget them, we loved them so dear,
For memory to fade from our lives like a tear;
But lips need not speak when our hearts mourn sincerely
For great often dwells where it seldom is heard.
Friends who see us can only imagine the wound is healed,
But little they know of the heartaches concealed.
We wonder if you know the hours we've spent,
The lonely aching endless hours since you went and left us here to mourn.
The tears shed the constant need of you, and missing you always we wonder if you know.
Sadly missed by sons and daughters.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE
"The County Chairman"
Will Rogers' Latest, Also His Finest.
—Famous Geordie Ade Comedy Described in advance accounts from Hollywood as the finest to date of Will Rogers' notable series of American character portraits, the Fox Film production, "The County Chairman", will be seen at the Belle Theatre, for three days beginning tomorrow (Saturday), matinee and evening.

"The County Chairman" is a screen adaptation of the famous play of the same title, by one of America's foremost humorists, George Ade. Opening on Broadway in the year 1902, "The County Chairman" ran there for a year with Macklyn Arbuckle as its star and then toured for the next three seasons. In addition to the celebrity which it brought to Arbuckle, the play created another star of the screen—Willis F. Sweatman, who appeared in the leading role of "Sheriffarus", colored man-of-all-work in the screen play. Stepin Fetchit is seen in this notable part.

"The County Chairman" it is said, is a story of smiles and hearty laughs, rivalling the hugely successful "Judge Priest" and "David Harum" as a vehicle for Rogers. In the new film he is seen as a wily, lovable county boss half-diplomat, half-rustic. His wins elections and arranges love matches with equal skill —and no one, not even his rivals, can resist him.

John Blystone has directed the picture, and the adaptation from George Ade's play has been made by Sam Hellman and Gladys Lehman.

A notable supporting cast includes such players as Evelyn Venable, Kent Taylor, Louise Dresser, Berton Churchill, Mickey Rooney, Frank Melton and Stepin Fetchit.

Once again, it is stated, Will Rogers displays his recently developed flair for singing in this picture. You will recall his musical propensities in "Judge Priest." This time he renders an old-time "minstrel rangers' song, accompanying himself on the guitar. Another thrill sight of "The County Chairman" is one of those famous torchlight processions so much in vogue at the turn of the century. This one is staged by Will and is said to have all the frenzy and thrill of its original.

You mustn't miss Will Rogers the inimitable, in "The County Chairman". You'll see him more than ever, and no one can say any more than that!

Another of those popular All-Star comedies, this one appropriately titled "Three Cheers for Love", your old friend Mickey Mouse in his latest laugh jamboree "Two Gun Mickey", and the Belle latest news events of the world will be exhibited on the same program. At the Saturday matinee Ken Maynard and his wonder horse "Tarzan" will appear in the thrilling drama of early western daring "The Mystery Mountain". Myrna Loy and Cary Grant are appearing at the Belle tonight in "Wings in the Dark" with four others.

AT THE CAPITOL
"Girl O' My Dreams"
A Sparkling Romance of College Youth with Mary Carlisle, Eddie Nugent and Other Stars.

Music, girls and gayety, prime requisites of college films, are provided in super-abundance in "Girl O' My Dreams," which opened yesterday at the Capitol Theatre with Mary Carlisle and Sterling Holloway in leading roles.

Among the co-eds vieing with Miss Carlisle for the more pulchritudinous honors are GIGI Parrish, Wampas baby star, Jeanie Roberts, Beverly and Bettymae Crane, and a round score of pretty sorority misses. Nor is there any dearth of masculine accomplishments in the film with Eddie Nugent, Creighton Chaney, Arthur Lake and a number of college track stars in the cast.

"Girl O' My Dreams," is the amusing story of a conceited college hero who is cast down from his high place by a framed election promoted by comic Sterling Holloway, playing the editor of the college daily. Holloway's prank elevates a big and beautiful shot-putter to the honor of the most popular man in college, and with his election goes the affections of pretty Mary Carlisle, the college vamp.

The paradoxical situation exists until the day of the big inter-collegiate track meet when the romantic dead-lock is finally straightened out amid thrilling scenes of track events.

One of the high lights of the film is Ted Dahl's orchestra, famed for its musical arrangements that make dancing a pleasure under any conditions, the orchestra features several new song hits which form an enchanting back ground for the campus picture.

"The President Vanishes"

The oddest and most recent of the Hollywood "miracles" is that which brings starring to an actor already over fifty after he had passed more than thirty years on the stage and films. Such a Hollywood in pursuit of that elusive honor.

He is Arthur Byron who plays the title role in "The President Vanishes" and is what you call a hot name because his public had seen so little of him!

Replies Mr. Byron:

Byron's brilliant career, his reputation among producers as one of the finest character actors extant had little to do with his selection.

Lewis Stone originally booked for the role was discarded in Byron's favor when the producer felt that Stone, a long-time star, was too well established as a romantic lead to be willing to play a character part.

AEROPLANES DEVELOPING NEW FIELD OF TRANSPORT

The aeroplane goes marching on! In New York recently, an aeroplane went aloft with a motor car attached to the under carriage as photo in LOWER LEFT shows. This flight has caused speculation as to tremendous possibilities of such a scheme. For instance, the Arctic wastes of northern Canada are teeming with riches awaiting only some means of reaching them. The artist illustrates how his can be done in UPPER LEFT. The aeroplane carries an lookout with machinery, lake or ocean to pick it up. In case of great fire, earthquakes, ship wrecks, ambulances and lifeboats, along under huge aeroplanes could be speedily transported to the scene of the disaster. Such a scheme is illustrated UPPER RIGHT. In the field of exploration, the hard waters of rivers, hitherto unapproachable, would be within reach if one were carrying a boat and passengers (CENTRE). The all-purpose, tary-minded will be interested in the possibility of transporting radio-controlled tanks behind enemy lines there to attack from the rear (LOWER RIGHT). Aviation experts in the United States are now working out plans for the development of aeroplanes designed for this special purpose.

SNOW QUEENS OF THE NORTHWEST

well established as a motion picture personality to be accepted as the leading character in the story. "The President Vanishes" is a sensational story, visualising the kidnaping of the President of the United States, and what would happen if such an event occurred. The tale would lose its tremendous wallop, according to the producer, if the personality of the investigator of the title role intruded into the part. The illusion must be complete.

22 Name Cast

Byron's name heads a cast of twenty-two film favorites including Janet Beecher, Paul Kelly, Peggy Conklin, Charley Grapewin, Robert McWade, Edward Arnold, Osgood Perkins, Edward Ellis, Andy Devine and Irene Franklin.

Capitol News, showing interesting glimpses of Current World Events will be shown at each performance. Last complete show 8.45.

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 22.—(CP)—The industrial section was decidedly slow today, due partly to the holiday on the New York market. A little buying appeared of an investment character, mainly in the downward. Listings while the inter-listed leaders were off more fractions.

Dominion Stores was definitely heavy on news that earnings for 1934 were down to 7 cents a share. Selling was only moderate however and this afternoon the price was holding at 8 against a close yesterday of 10. The other goods were firm to strong.

The Dominion Tar issues were strong again gaining a fraction and the preferred 10 points. Monarch, Pref. and Dominion, Coal Pfd. were also sharply higher.

Ford A, Nickel, the leading oils and Steels showed losses of fractions to 3-8

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 22.—(CP)—The price tone was a bit heavy on the mining section today and volume was small aside from fair action in McMillan Tors. Gunnar, McMillan, Granada and Sisco. Selling pools were almost dormant except Two Hughes which moved forward to 44.

Trade in the base metals was marked by a sharp sag in Base Metal Corporation, due evidently to the announcement that the mill had been closed temporarily. Mining Corporation, which controls Base Metals Corporation, lost 8 cents to 1.77. The shares showed little change.

McWatters sold off to 1.11 in the morning session but had a partial recovery this afternoon. Weakness ruled in McMillan again, the price going back to 1.2. Granada and Gunnar also lost ground.

Dividend payers of the secondary gold group held steady to strong.

PREMIER REFUSES REFERENDUM VOTE

Assures Delegation No Liquor Advertising Permitted

Toronto, Feb. 22 (CP)—Assurance that there will be no liquor advertising in Ontario and no sale of beer and wine in restaurants was given today by Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn to a delegation from the Ontario Temperance Federation.

Led by Roscoe Rodd of Windsor, president, the delegation asked the Premier to repeal the present beer and wine sales legislation or hold a Provincial referendum on the question.

Refusing to accede to the requests, the Premier said: "Your particular field is that of education. Eliminate the customers and there will be no sale."

During the Provincial General Election last June Mr. Hepburn said the Liberal Government would proclaim the beer and wine sale Act and give it a fair trial. The Premier said he is attempting to do that despite efforts of those seeking to induce violation of the laws.

"Carry on your campaign of education," he urged. "I am not prepared to grant your request, the time is not opportune."

Dr. John Coburn of Toronto contended that the Province had a chance to pass on the beer and wine legislation but it had been taken out of the hands by the last election.

He declared the present beverage rooms are worse than the old bar rooms.

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 22.—(AP)—A man listed as William J. Ihr, Canadian by birth, died today shortly after he was shot outside a night club, during a gun fight, with police officers, who sought to question him regarding a hold-up.

Identifying an automobile found in front of a night club as one used in a hold-up, Officer V. D. Rowe entered the establishment and called the man outside.

Seeing a revolver in the suspect's pocket, Rowe reached for it but as he did so the man leaped back, jerked another gun from under his shirt and opened fire, the officer reported. Rowe and another policeman, also started shooting and the suspect fell fatally wounded.

Detective Bureau investigators said Ihr surrendered here February 17, saying he was wanted as a parole violator in Michigan.

Officers said the victim's parents live in Remington, Ont. He came here seven months ago from Flint, Michigan.

Alemite and Grills Garage Win Opening Playoff Games For City League Championship

HECTIC BATTLES

Referees Rule With Iron Hand And Penalties Numerous

Alemite and Grills' Garage gained one goal advantages in the opening play-off games in the City League last night at the Arena, when the Alemite sked out a two to one hard fought victory over the S.E.A.C. kids, while the Grills' Garage aggregation were forced to extend themselves to protect their odd goal advantage, when they downed the Trenton team by the score of 3 to 2 in a hectic battle.

All of the scoring in the opening game happened in the middle frame, when Alemite bulged the hemp twice to more out in front, when Carl Morgan rifled home Covert's pass and Wilkins batted the rubber past Hinton on Lee's sweet pass-out. Not to be out-done Mc-Creary shifted into the net on the Pepper's pass and bang hopge the Foster Ward kids' only counter. The opening game of the twin bill proved by far the more exciting and faster played game according to the concensus of opinion of some 400 fans present.

Cliff Howie had the South Enders in his battle and was by far the star of the night as the Alemite trimmed the S.E.A.C. Howie was materially assisted on the offence by McIlrath, Coyer and McCreary all of whom played stellar games as Pringle, Green and Pepper turned in fine performances with Hinton stopping the proverbial million pucks in the S.E.A.C. net. Sinfield worked well in the winners net and was given adequate defensive support by Gilbert and Rigby. Carl Morgan landed the best player honors over the boards by Manager Hagerman for his first starting line with Lee and Wilkins leading the alternates into battle.

The line-ups of the first game:

Alemite—Goal, Sinfield; defence, Rigby and Gilbert; centre, Covert; wings, Carl Morgan, H. Morgan; subs, Ridley, Wilkins, Lee and Hazlewett.

Summary

1st Period

No score.
Penalties—H. Morgan (5 min.)

2nd Period

Alemite—C. Morgan (Covert) 7.07
Alemite—Wilkins (Lee) 9.11
S.E.A.C.—McCreary (Pepper) 15.05
Penalties—Bentley, Hammett, Gilbert, Morgan.

3rd Period

No score.
Penalties—Gilbert (5 min.), P. Morgan.

Trenton Rallies

Walker Grills' "Mechanics" assured an early lead over the Trenton entry, when Jim Semark rifled home a first period goal for the winners to put the "Mechanics" in the lead, which they insolently never relinquished throughout. Roy Smith took Johnson's pass to score Trenton's first counter in the middle frame and knot the score, but Semark again rose to the occasion and sunk Alec Weir's pass-out behind Goold for the Grills' second counter. The "Mechanics" moved further into the lead, when Cy Burridge pranked in to take Elmer's rebound and score the prettiest goal of the evening. On a solo effort Lemore kept the Trentonians in the running, late in the third period, by sinking the rubber past Buskard to make the final score 3 to 2 for Grills.

Reng, St. Denis starred for the winners and played good hockey going both ways. St. Denis was closely followed in order by Barriage, Weir and Semark as Ehler, Canning and Henn played inspired hockey for the winners. Buskard looked good in the Grills' net. Lott starred for the Trenton aggregation as the best defenceman on the ice. Lamore, Smith, Rosenpiel, Miller and Johnson also played good hockey for the visitors.

The line ups:

Trenton—Goal, Gould; defence, Lott and Fenion; centre, Johnson; wings, Smith and Rosenpiel; subs Kidd, Maitis, Miller and Lamore.

Grills'—Goal, Buskard; defence, Ehler, Weir; centre, Barriage; wings, St. Denis and McGuire; subs, Day, Semark, Canning, T. Hen, W. Henn and Connors.

ARE THEY HEADED FOR DOMINION BASKETBALL SUPREMACY?

With a brilliant string of victories against no defeats during the current season either in Big Six competition or in intercollegiate matches, University of Toronto seniors are making a strong bid toward Dominion basketball honors. The Varsity cagers are coached by strategy. Here are three regulars of the 1928 Olympic team making a striking leap for a loose ball. LEFT, Phil Gold, guard, dropping back for a shot at the basket after a rush up the floor. CENTRE, Alex Munroe, former Canadian high jump champion and a member of the Argonauts football team. A noticeable lack in reight compared to the average cage squad, is offset by great aggressiveness in ball-handling ability in the Blue Lew Hayman, mentor of Toronto caught by the camera, in action, LEFT, Phil Gold, guard, dropping ward, seeking the basket with a difficult shot from the side. INSET Lew Hayman, coach.

Rough and Tumble Game Won By Detroit Over Maroons With New Line Scoring All Goals

Match Penalty, Four Majors and Four Minors Imposed

CANADIENS LOSE

Hawks Keep to Top, While Eagles Defeat Amerks

By A. E. Pulford, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Detroit Red Wings can't believe yet that they won't make it to Stanley Cup playoffs and instead of going through the motions for the rest of the season they keem determined to fight every game to a finish.

It's the same way with Montreal Maroons with the big difference that Tommy Gorman's team are sure of taking a playoff spot in the Canadian Division of the National Hockey League. Still they even resort to fist swinging in their desperateness to win.

The battling qualities of both teams came out in a rough and tumble match at Detroit last night in which a match penalty, four majors and four minors were imposed. The rough house reached its peak in the third period, when Earl Robinson, of Maroons, fought with a spectator who was handcuffed for the rest of the game.

Detroit won the mid-today were still deep in the American Division dollar, 15 points behind Boston and Chicago Black Hawks who defeated Canadiens 3-1 in a tame affair at Montreal. Two other dollar teams, St. Louis Eagles, came from behind twice to beat Americans 4-3 in New York.

Players Pile In

The scrapping at Detroit started in the second period when Lionel Conacher and Doug Young highsticked each other. Conacher dropped his gloves and waded into Young, who returned his punches. Referee Duke McCurdy attempting to separate them but managed only to hold Young, while the Maroon defenseman continued slugging the wing.

Players of both teams piled on the official and the battlers and before them for the ice before the fighting was stopped. For that exhibition Conacher and Young drew match and third game suspensions, tiely quiet until Robinson and Bob Lewis started scrapping in the third.

After Robinson had dropped Lewis to the ice he started to the spectator and the officials needed the aid of several players to restrain him away. He and Lewis were given majors for their punch swapping and the match was awarded the decision's total for his encounter with the customer.

Detroit fans not only had the fights thrown in for their benefit but they saw the return of Detroit fans' Adams' has assembled score at three Wing goals. Johnny Sorrell got the first alone in the opening period and made it 2-0 in the second with Syd Howe's aid. Then Howe helped Eddie Wiseman to the third goal in the third period. Goalie Gacher scored the lone Maroon tally in the third.

Breaks Win Game

Breaks won Eagles the game in New York but deserved nothing less on their night's play. With the score 3-3 Marty Burke in the third Red Dutton tried to cut off Bill Lamb's shot and dove into the American net, depriving Goalie Lamb with him and tying the score for the Eagles.

Then Glen Brydson, who had knotted the score early in the period, caught most of the New Yorkers up the ice and swung down alone to beat Roy Worters for the winning goal.

Natty Oliver, Lorne Carr and Art Chapman were Chicago's scorers in goals and Pet Kelly got the first Eagle tally.

Lorne Chabot might have been leading the league in shutouts today but for a shot from centre ice that caught him napping at Montreal and bounded over his pads into the net in the third period. Wilbur Hershaller fired the long shot at him to make the score 2-1 after Tommy Cook and Doc Romnes had scored for Chicago in the second.

Ed Kendall made the game a sure thing for Chicago a few minutes after Wildcr's goal by breaking away with only Tony Sarg ago and Wilf Cude to beat and driving the puck under Cude's outstretched arm.

CENTRE LEAGUE SCHEDULE CLOSES

Zion's Hill Well in Lead in League Standing

Stirling—The two games played in the Stirling Arena on Tuesday night, Feb. 19, marked the closing of the regular schedule. Keen interest has been shown by the public in these events all season. Like good business men increasing their trade by stocking high grade merchandise, the teams in this league have increased their following over a hundred per cent by giving the fans a brand of hockey that is hard to beat. Regardless of their standing every team in the league put forth its best effort. Even the teams with no chance of gaining a playoff position never gave up trying to score a win. This spirit of fight and pep has kept enthusiasm at fever heat all season and the fans are grateful to the players on all teams for their fine effort. Since Stirling dropped out of the Central Valley league the interest in hockey dwindled a great deal. The centre hockey league has done much to revive that interest. Stirling is one of the best hockey towns in Eastern Ontario. In the first game Zion's defeated Stirling 5-3. In the 10-10 second game Mount Pleasant topped Bethel to the town by the score of 5-1. There were no penalties in either of the teams and play was fast and clean throughout both games.

In the first game Evergreen was the first scorer when Jack Sills, a resence of their flashy centre player. Don Rodgers. In spite of this handicap Zion's Hill, with Ivan Townsend of Zions had a picnic with the puck. He could not shoot any one on the ice. To prove his speed he grabbed the puck from the play off, circled the net, and the stick-handling his way through the centre ice, bombarded the first counter in less than a minute of play. Evergreen took plenty of penalties upon, he notched the first each rush. Reid and Heath got the participant to harness himself to a balloon all but counter-balancing his weight, then to step over hedge, barns or other buildings by gently springing into the air. Applying the same principle to skijumping has great possibilities for the daring by lifting the weight of the body and by waving the arms, as shown in the accompanying illustration. Leo Gaspel, the Australian, astounded spectators recently by attaining a speed of 84 miles an hour with a streamlined gas bag and weighed 4ks of this design. Figure 1 is an illustration, shows position and action; figure two shows foot and hand holds; figure three shows weight-ed skis. Each one has 65 pounds evenly distributed over its length.

West May Draw Up Own Football Rules If Proposals Fail

By BOB PRIESTLY
Central Press Canadian Corre-spondent.

Winnipeg, Feb. 22—Will western rugby teams play under their own code this fall and will the Dear Eagle Rugby club, Winnipeg, be awarded the Leader Trophy as junior Dominion champions for 1934?

These are questions on which answers are expected from the Canadian rugby union's annual session, slated for Toronto to-morrow, when Toronto, Calgary rugby football union having placed them before the parent body, Clubs in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, keenly alive to the situation, anxiously await the verdicts.

For some years now, the west has been advocating changes to the rules which they are convinced will be most advantageous to the game, not forgetting the cash customers, the players and the overburdened whistle-tooters as necessary as they are neglected.

Long and earnest study has been put into these advocated changes by the players in the east, but western officials state, apparently pay little attention to them. At November meeting of the east, attending the annual meeting of the C.R.U., decided to take the bull by the horns, they declared that the C.R.U. rules commission did not include this matter among the changes in the 1935 rules that they would consider, but would frame rules according to the revised version and put them into force at some years to come, giving the players, fans and officials a chance to get thoroughly acquainted with them for a fuller enjoyment of rugby.

Seek Forward-Pass Changes

The changes the west want to see adopted include the necessity of the ball being handled or touching the ground between the goal line and the dead ball line before a goal can be scored on a kick over the end zone or into touch-in-goal. They feel that points are too easily made when the ball is sent sailing into the end zone for instance, whereas if out the defending team having a chance to run it back.

The west also wants to see the restrictions removed from the forward pass rules. They want pass the ball from anywhere behind the line of scrimmage, on any down and from any portion on the field. They also want permit the attacking team to have any number of eligible passes in the goal area before giving the ball to the defending team as first down on that team's 25-yard line.

The west also asks that every attacking player be allowed to interfere from his own dead ball line to a point five yards in advance of the line of scrimmage on plays from scrimmage; ten yards was strongly advocated but the delegates felt that th eproposal would have a better chance of acceptance with the shorter distance.

Allow Free Substitutes

They also ask that the team having a major score made against it be given the privilege of receiving the kick-off or kicking-off, and that the clamps be removed from substitutions so that player may go into the game more than once each quarter.

The strength of their argument goes behind single point scoring, increased scoring, they claim, is chiefly off forward passing. They heartily agree with it. Scoring needs were who, last fall, said that the "kick to the dead ball line is an abomination." They feel that a few present interference rules are too cumbersome and entirely inadequate offensively, failing to give the attack an equal chance with the defence.

Admitting that touchdowns have been limited, they feel the game passes the west claims that the restrictions, under which it has operated, have "choked" scoring and spoiled its purpose—a threat to keep the defence against loss of ground temple to pass. The defence is well aware of the fact that they have to the line with more density, so that runs or plunges have less chance of being successful than in any other point in the field. The changes the west advocates would force the defence to remain more open everywhere on the field because of the forward pass threat.

Want Rule Changes

Therefore they feel that with the interference restrictions removed, with half backs interfering the full distance, the forward pass being permitted from anywhere behind the line of scrimmage, on any down and from any portion on the field, the rules would permit the attacking team to have every opportunity to complete passes in the goal area before giving the ball to the defending team as first down on that

Toronto 'Varsity Cagers Are Melodious Sextet

By RAYMOND B. COLLETT
Central Press Canadian Sports Writer

Toronto, Feb. 22—Headed apparently for a close run toward the Dominion basketball championship, University of Toronto seniors have developed a team that is not known than their basketball playing but which is the opinion of their coach has had a great deal to do with their success—an ability to sing.

Lining up four of his first string players, Coach Lew Hayman gives the same Lew who master-minds the Toronto Argonauts in interprovincial rugby wars — can produce a vocal quartet of real harmony and melody. Not that is the main reason that actually supplies them with basketball strategy but Coach Hayman realizes that a team that is able to sing which really brought the Varsity quartet to the front and gave them a harmony and team spirit which has had much to do with their success.

So far the Varsity stalwarts have not bowed to a real Canadian team this season, and they play both this and the United States circuit in interstate collegiate battles. Moreover the basketball aggregations have found time to play in many exhibition games. A defence based mainly on a strong defensive game has been responsible for their success.

Wearing rushes, with short crossfield passes at blinding speed, accurate ball-handling and a fiddling attack that has become an are highlight the Varsity games. Connolly is their scoring star, but only because his teammates find him unselfish. Danny Meagher, another who is centred the "revolving hole play" which Coach Hayman features, is also a crack ball looser, while speed and yes more speed are drilled into the smaller boys.

Of Canadian basketball in general Lew Hayman has this to say:

"Basketball has come a few years ago, basketball was a very popular game. I remember the reason I was accustomed to basketball as the main winter pastime. Then hockey came along in the game with wonderful enthusiasm and the support given to it, and soon became alone, is remarkable.

Defeat Buffalo Team

Opposing the University of Buffalo Cagers in their American tour the Blues drew a crowd of 2,000 people —and won the game. Incidentally the Varsity forward and one of the most musically talented players was offered a contract to broadcast. Many similar offers came from Buffalo radio station.

Though dark-haired and twenty-three years' experience, is the veteran of this team who in their years, year of play together have run up a remarkable record. Most of the Blues have been in their senior season which should make Varsity a threat in the cage game for some time. Hayman, who is in most universities, athletics must meet scholastic requirements as well as sport. According to their member his victorious play, reach and average mark in classes, have been quite brilliant.

No wonder team? Hayman says not. Though to date they have more than met their opponents.

"Just a fine bunch of boys who work together hard and unselfishly," he says, "and we have developed something in reserve for an emergency, and that goes for every man as a whole. Any one of the eleven men who comprise the squad is a regular."

Maybe they will carry the Blue to Dominion honors, but again Lew only smiles. "I never play a game before we take the field," is his comment.

But anyway they will be fighting hard when the Canadian basketball crown is won.

NAPANEE WINS ROUND BY 20-7

Tweed, Ont., Feb. 22—Napanee Juniors defeated Tweed Juniors here Thursday night by a score of 9 to 4 and captured the Hastings-Lennox O.H.A. group, 20 to 7, having won the first game at home. They will meet the winners of the next round against Kingston Frontenacs, for the visiting team and better team on the night's play and deserved the verdict. They played a cagey game and frequently broke up the Tweed breaks and adding gradually to the eight point margin accumulated in the initial playoff engagement. The Gibbard team should give Kingston a real battle.

Tweed led at the end of the first period, Thompkins and M. Leal being the marksmen for Tweed, while Tompkins counted for Napanee. Leroy tied it up for Napanee and the second period ended in a two-all tie. The visiting team staged a carnival of scoring in the final period, C. Jackson scoring four and W. Jackson three for Gibbards with Maguire and Arber each bagging one for the homesters.

Jack Reeves turned in a superlative game in the nets for the locals and saved miraculously several times with Napanee carrying the puck to the goal mouth. The Thompkins Elubury, Maguire and Joe Compagnone were probably the best for Tweed, with Jackson brothers, Curry and Tompkins the pick of the visitors. The game was fast and, despite the fact that the home team were the recipients of a sound lacing the largest crowd of season enjoyed it. Bouncer Holway of Belleville handled the game in excellent fashion. The teams:

Tweed—Forwards: defence, M. Leal and Tummon; centre Maguire, wings, Alexander and Courneyse; subs, Loffman, W. Leal, Elsbury and Arbor.

Napanee—Goal, Curry, defence, Richardson and Murphy; centre, W. Jackson; wings, C. Jackson and Tanner; subs, Greathead, Leary, Evans and G. Curry.

HUMAN ROCKET

If something that looks like a character from cut of Buck Rogers' adventures should flash by or over you at a speed of 80 miles an hour, don't rush to see your favorite oculist, psychiatrist. It is no doubt only that Zepplin skiing has caught up with your locality.

Zepplin skiing is the adaption of an old English sport. We might say that it is a combination of the two riskiest sports ever devised by man. Ski bag jumping was extremely popular in England, until the appalling death rate that resulted forced the authorities to put a ban on it. The modus operandi was for the participant to harness himself to a balloon all but counter-balancing his weight, then to step over hedge, barns or other buildings by gently springing into the air. Applying the same principle to ski-jumping has great possibilities for the daring by lifting the weight of the body and by waving the arms, as shown in the accompanying illustration. Hunter Trembles Protection

CHAPTER ELEVEN

From the depths of the silky cushions, Faith heard the pages of the paper rustle. Then silence. Hunter must have finished by now reading the merciful story which would condemn her in his eyes forever. She didn't know she had murdered Agnes, he would know now what sort of creep people she had been associating with. Please take me. Shabby intrigue; ending with suicide, the police. How horrible it all was!

Faith bore the silence as long as she could. "Why don't you say some thing?" she cried, springing up from the couch. "You think it's your duty to give me up—call the police—do you just despise me a bit want me to go?"

Frowning, Hunter threw down the paper as if it were not pleasant to his touch. "You make it very hard for me," he murmured. "But I must certainly have no idea of calling on the police."

"Because you don't want to be mixed up in it then," Faith said fiercely.

His eyes were cold. "You're mistaken. If I thought you were guilty, I wouldn't hesitate to turn you over—"

"If I leave this house," Faith said dully, "I have no place to go. You will find me—drag me through the mud—"

Lines deepened around his mouth as he looked at her. "You won't let me give you any money?"

"No." Faith's arms stiffened at her sides. His dark blue eyes were probing in, searching her poor little secrets, uncovering her despair, her tattered pride.

"Well, I guess I'd better go." With an effort she held her head high.

He turned abruptly on his heel as if he agreed that an impossible situation had been prolonged enough. For the last time she looked around her at the lovely terrace, at this sanctuary she must leave.

"I can't let you run off this way," he said striding back to stand before her. "You haven't committed any crime. You've let yourself in for a bit of notoriety, publicity, of course, if they get hold of you, but they won't put you in prison, you know."

Hadn't she any pride at all? "Please don't worry about me. I'll be all right." Faith forced back her tears and moved to the terrace door. Nothing mattered anymore after this.

"Come back," Hunter called sharply.

The imperious note of his voice brought her about, her eyes misty with tears, her lip quivering.

"I'm going to pretend I like this," he said. "But since you won't listen to reason and accept my financial assistance, I suppose my name is valuable in your present predicament." His somber gaze went beyond her to the portrait in the living room. "I'm finished."

"You're not to go out, not to leave this place until I can get you a passport. I can fix that. You understand, Faith Barclay." He went on. "I shall have to trust your discretion in the matter of people you may meet and talk to—"

"I don't want to meet anyone," Faith murmured.

Hunter ignored that, continuing. "I'll stop at my club for the present. If you'll excuse me now, I'll have to pack my bag. Perhaps you'll be pleased at the door. "You'll need clothes, of course." He looked her over with a cool and calculating interest. "I'll attend to that. I'll be back in a trice, and not anything further that could escape."

There was nothing she could say or do but give herself up to the moment.

In the next few days Hunter came but rarely and briefly to the penthouse. He left Faith alone with their relations on a business-like basis from which Faith dared not depart. He made it quite clear that she didn't care to know how she spent her time, willingly imprisoned in this place that had come to mean paradise to her. He couldn't guess the hopes and dreams reborn here; the feverish expectancy with which she awaited his visits.

Had he seen Gertrude, she wondered. The papers one morning answered that question with the information that her sad days were ended. Stevens had left for California. Faith's spirits rose.

She was coming gradually to realize the new estate. She was like a child turned loose in a toyshop and beautiful toys. She wanted to touch and finger every one between the shape of objects in the hands of others. Only then did she realize how superficial had been her contacts in the Bouquet Shop! how much she had to learn.

There were hours of ease, waited on by Ito, hours scanning forward high above the city, safe and hidden. Agnes, Roger, all the others who had been so ready to use her reputation to places, faded into a past she meant to forget.

Every day boxes and packages were delivered from the smartest shops in town. Hunter did things in a princely way. There were sport suits, afternoon dresses, and formal evening gowns, dozens of webby stockings, silk underwear, negligees, skin shoes, and exquisite lingerie which Faith could not resist purchasing in the same detached manner as he formulated plans for her selling.

All the same, she told herself with a thrill, he must think her pretty a little about her, had some picture of her in his mind, for he chose those lines and shades that enhanced her loveliness. He must know that almond green would bring out the lights in her hair and eyes, and that black increased the white brilliance of her skin.

On the third day a wardrobe trunk arrived and two divine ocean bags. That evening Hunter came in before dinner to announce: "You are selling tomorrow for Paris on the Ile-de-France. Just as nurse-by as if he had said, "Here are tickets for the theatre tomorrow night."

Faith was wearing a chartreuse crepe marocain that gave her the look of a naiad risen from green waters. She stood by the fountain, her hands loosely clasped in front of her, her small head gleaming under a fire of stars. "I don't suppose there's any use in thanking you," she said. "I've tried. You've been so wonderful—"

For a moment she thought she had turned him into an image. Admiration of her beauty, her longing. The guard seemed to have slipped from his eyes leaving them on fire in his white face. His silence reached out to touch her.

Then brusquely he said: "You'll catch cold if we stay out here." And he turned away, back into the living room, murmuring something about an engagement.

It didn't matter that he was her host. Faith thought rebelliously, following him in. He wouldn't hold, wouldn't admit emotion where she was concerned.

"Goodnight," he said holding out his hand. He was in conventional pattern again, his white flower a real on the perfection of his evening clothes.

"Goodnight." He was going on to a dinner in some fine house; on to gay parties where he could smile and dance without being afraid of compromising his precious freedom. "I hope you have a lovely time," Faith said as if she hoped nothing of the kind.

A week ago she would have been wild with excitement at the idea of going to Paris. Tonight, as even the packing of her lovely things lifted the depression which had settled on her when she had closed behind him. It had seemed to close him in behind those her world.

Tomorrow night he would be back here in his penthouse, the ocean widening between them. He would stand before the portrait of his dead mother, the lady in black velvet and say: "Well, mother, you needn't have worried. I told you I'd send her away."

Her last night in his home, troubled, tormented by preparations, reeked of loneliness. And then in the morning saying goodbye to the dear beautiful things she had come to cherish—the terrace garden bright with sunshine, the rows of books she had hoped to read some day, the dark red leather armchair under the lamp, the old mirrors and the sighings. Then there was Ito bobbing goodbye from the doorway as if he were jerked up and down on a string . . .

It was so strange being out on the start again in a taxi! Police had no terrors for Faith Barclay in her smart beige travelling coat, a beige lyrocne tilted at a Marquise angle over the smooth waves of greenish gold hair. Faith Marvin had vanished, Agnes tragedy had slid off the pages of the headlines to give space to newer sensations.

Faith began to feel the thrill of departure. Hunter had promised to meet her at the boat.

Trunks and porters, faces, flags, noise, the towering bulk of an ocean liner, narrow, with decks, studded with portholes. She felt small and timid. A steward led her along an endless corridor, and with a flourish opened the door of her cabins suite.

Hunter was there already. His hand went forward. Men as if he had come to welcome her back home. "I'm glad you're not, can't believe I'm going," she said.

"I wouldn't mind running over myself." He was in the act of a tempest, so handsome and boyish that Faith could hardly believe he was the same grave self-contained man who had discouraged any intimacy in the penthouse.

For a delicious moment she pretended he was going with her. That night will be a bridal room, in his fashionable taste, with flowers, furnishings. Hunter hadn't forgotten anything for her comfort and pleasure. There were flowers, fruits, bonbons, books. Everything she might want, she thought, sensed himself—his love, his companionship.

"I've cabled the Guarantee Trust my Paris bank, to expect you," he said. "You'll find enough there will be a thousand dollars a month, drafts, afternoon, to draw checks for your immediate expenses. Anyone will cash them."

"The Ritz is much," Faith gasped. "I can't really—"

"It's one of our bargains," Hunter said, smiling. "When you feel you've had enough, let me know. I'll planned as his wife would. "I know you'll like Paris. It's a good time of year. Not too many people yet, still you sail, but I have an engagement. I must break—"

Now he was going. Faith couldn't protest any more. It was past the shut threat of tears that choked her eyes. Her hands fluttered out. "Oh, I'll miss you," she whispered back to her face close to his.

His pen sat men lightly around her body his dark head. "—You're very sweet, Faith. And in a low voice, "that's no use. The captain, I suppose, the better for both of us." He kissed her. Her and went quickly out of the state room.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Although Tarzan could not distinguish their words, he distinctly heard a man and woman speaking. The next room was dark. Its window unlatched. All quiet within, the ape-man slipped into the vacant room.

Silently he crossed to the door behind which he now heard two voices raised as though in argument. Then the woman spoke again—a note of scorn and perhaps fear in her voice.

"So give me the papers and let me go." The man's reply was so low Tarzan could not catch the words.

Then the woman spoke again—a note of scorn and perhaps fear in her voice.

"You would not DARE, Ivan Karzenoff!" she said.

"Do not touch me! Take your hands from me!" It was then that Tarzan of the Apes opened the door and stepped into the room. He saw a huge, bull-necked officer and a girl futilely struggling against the fellow's unwelcome advances.

Little Benny's Note Book

We was eating breakfist and ma said to pop, You know Mona is ot today Willyum and I have quite a lot to do, what with this and that so you and Benny another, and although I haven't the slightest objection to preparing supper at home, still I thawt perhaps you mite not like me to rush home to death, so I thawt perhaps we mite have supper in a resterant for a little change.

Fine, she, let's make it a big change while we're about it pop said. I mean let's eat in some novel place with music and delishus food and atmosphere, and then we'd know we've been out, he said, and ma said, that sounds perfect, the Rib roof is a lovely place.

We've been there, and the only think exotic about it is the holdover prices, pop said. Now there's a little Japanese place downtown that I've always had a hankering to try, it's called Sooky Yooky or Sammy Yammy or something like that and I understand they serve Japanese dishes that you could even get in Japan. Banny yanny, for example or as we would say, rice and snake, he said, and ma said, My goodness, Willyum, rice and snake.

Or many a many, you can say it either way when you order it, they're very delicate, pop said. Or you mite prefer raw fish soup, they call it, you no, in their quaint Jugernaut way, or is that the dish they call barry barry? he said, and ma said, I dont know and I'm sure the noliege would never have any personal application as far as I'm concerned. Not that I'm narrow minded on the manners and customs of other lands and so forth I have any sympathy with people who believe they would catch the Yellow peril or something just by eating in one of those places, but after all Willyum there's a place like home even with the help of a few cans, what do you think Willyum? she said.

I think so, pop said.

And he gave me a private wink and we ate home tonite, being animal lovers and avoid and hating swell.

Fifteenth Birthday of Kinsmen Club Celebrated

Local Organization Hears President Over Radio

Commemorating the fifteenth birthday of the Kinsmen Association, a large and enthusiastic gathering of the local club was held on Wednesday evening in Dominion Chain. This meeting was the first national observance night held by the Belleville Kinsmen Club since they adopted the slogan, "Canada for Peace and Goodwill," which was so acclaimed by every Kinsmen Club at the National Convention.

40 Clubs in Canada

Fifteen years ago the first Kinsmen Club was formed at Hamilton by Harold Rogers, and today over forty clubs reaching from coast to coast have been formed, the membership consisting of all young business and professional men. At the meeting last evening, President Keith Scott acted as chairman. Greetings from the founder Harold Rogers, were read by Past President Bill McIntosh, while Angus McVan read a message from the District Governor.

The Club was fortunate in having as guest, Mr. R. C. Sisler, manager of the local branch of the Dominion Bank, who was the first treasurer of the Kinsmen Club. The president called on Mr. Sisler who in a brief address, outlined the formation of the club. Mr. Sisler also stated that he would like to speak to the members at some future date on the Boy Scout Movement.

Under Song Leader William Wrist community singing was enjoyed. Mr. Harold Barrett favored the members with two fine solos, accompanied by Mrs. Barrett.

The speaker of the evening, Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, was introduced by the president, and delivered a pictorial address, painting a picture of the horrors of war.

Mr. Payne pictured the wars of today with the wars of years ago stating that the bows and arrows used many years ago were no worse than the poisonous gases used during the last war. He told the gathering just how dreadful a war really was and what a wonderful thing it would be if we could work for peace the same as a great many had done in working for war. The speaker emphasized the fact that wars in bygone days were between isolated nations but today with modern science no nation is isolated either politically, financially or in any other way. Continuing, he said that diplomats do not make wars. Quoting from an issue of the "Rotarian," he said:

"In a word, the problem of world peace is not the problem of getting rid of war-making leaders but of educating the peace-loving majorities to the fundamental truth that they are themselves responsible for the present danger of war because they fail to grasp the ultimate consequences of what they conceive to be their rights."

League's Good Work

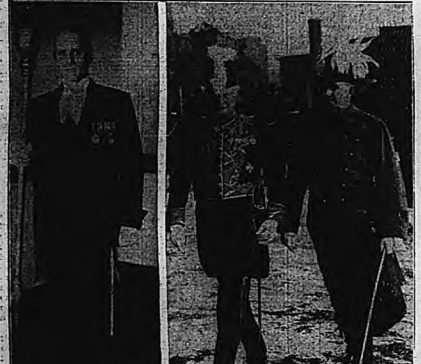
Mr. Payne spoke of the good work the League of Nations was doing, and stated that without the help of all nations the League could do very little. The speaker read a report on the League of Nations on how armament firms can help to start wars. That armament firms have fomented war scares; (2) Have attempted to bribe government officials; (3) have spread false reports concerning military and naval programs of foreign countries to stimulate government expenditures; (4) they sought to influence public opinion through the control of the press.

In expression of appreciation to the speaker was voiced by Clement Allen and tendered by the president. At 10.30 the club listened to an address given in a radio broadcast by their national president, Gordon Harbinson. The meeting closed with the singing of the Kinsmen Song and the National Anthem.

HEALTH POLICY IS INCORPORATED

Premier Says He Will Not Blindly Enter Into Plan

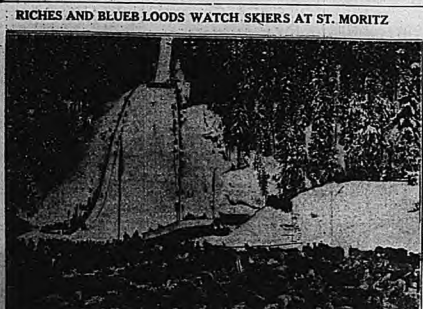
Ottawa, Feb. 22 (CP)—Foundations for a National Health Policy and a National System of Health Insurance are contained in the Unemployment Insurance Bill now well advanced towards final approval in the House of Commons. Prime Minister R. B. Bennett stated this last night, and at the same time refused to embark, as he said, blindly, on an immediate system of Health Insurance.



Liberal and Labor members of the House directed renewed fire at various clauses of the Bill when it was in Committee of the Whole last night and attacked particularly the clause which empowers the proposed Employment and Social Insurance Commission to collect information on health and draw up proposals for a Health Insurance scheme. They claimed the clause was useless and should be struck out if the government had nothing better to offer.

A new attempt to have the validity of the whole Bill tested in the courts was made by Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Liberal Leader, and promptly rejected by the Prime Minister. Mr. King proposed an amendment to make the Bill come into force by proclamation after a reference had been submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada and a judgment obtained declaring it to be within the powers of Parliament.

"I cannot consent to theories being tested in the courts," declared Mr. Bennett. "What will be tested will be concrete cases."



The House voted down the amendment by 57 to 31. Except for a few sections held over pending consideration of changes suggested in the course of the debate, and the schedules at the end, the entire Bill has been approved by Committee of the Whole, when the House adjourned last night. The remaining clauses and schedules will be taken up next week.

Ontario's Nineteenth Legislature Assembly Open s With Pomp

A booming fifteen gun salute, an impressive display of the Royal Canadian Regiment, Lieutenant Governor Herbert A. Bruce in colorful state costume reviewing the troops were signals for the opening of Ontario's 19th legislature on Wednesday. CANADIAN DEPARTMENT STORES

Set A Goal For Your Child

By LISA GRENELLE

Upon John's still unruly gold curls the salesman set a man's soft hat. John looked at himself in the store mirror, and slowly a great grin spread across the freckled pink cheeks. "I look good-looking in this," he muttered.

"Good looking! with that coat and those shoes!" jeered sister.

John glanced down at his coat, which hung crooked, bagging hardly more than half the requisite number of buttons, dusty, wrinkled, it looked very tired and old under the new man's hat. And the shoes were scuffed at the toes and worn at the heels.

"Well, I can't get you a whole new outfit, sonny," father said.

"It wouldn't make any difference," sister said scornfully, "it would look the same in a week—so will the hat—like something the cat dragged in. It doesn't pay to get good clothes for children—especially boys," she added with emphasis.

Interest in Appearance

"I have some very nice caps, if you'd like to try them?" the clerk said.

"You can throw a cap around," sister said, with that scornful note. "And you don't expect a boy who wears a cap to tie his necktie straight or keep his breakfast off it."

John gave his sister a vicious, "wait till I get you home" look and turned a pleading gaze on his father. "I got to have this hat, dad," he said with as intense a shout as if he were begging for his life, "I got to—honest, I look awful in caps."

"Think you can live up to it, Johnny?"

"Sure I can, sure I can."

For the first time John began to take some interest in his appearance. It dawned on him on the way home, after several careful, surreptitious peeps at his reflection in shop windows, that there was something in what sister said, never to be admitted to her, of course, a spotted, crooked tie, an untrained mop of hair didn't set off a man's hat to the best advantage.

Hat Brings Reform

"Father," he asked two blocks from home, can I have a dime for a shine?"

It made a difference right away, a good brushing of the coat was also effective. The hair and the tie, of course, proved to be a bigger price, a greater struggle, but worth it when it was discovered that except for the obvious newness, the difference between John's hat and father's was hardly discernible. "Be careful, father, don't take my hat by mistake," John cautioned proudly, laying his beside father's in the hall.

Before the advent of the hat it had been difficult for John to see much point in growing up—in all this neatness, cleanliness and spotlessness, father and Uncle Ned affected, seemed to cost only a lot of bother with no fun attached—but now all that was changed—he had a man's hat!

DR. G. HOWLAND NEUROLOGIST IS CROSS-EXAMINED

Justice Jeffrey Asks Three Important Questions of Witness

FITNESS FOR TRIAL

Four Neurologists Testify as to Capability of Accused

The Vermilyea murder trial resumed shortly after four o'clock on Friday afternoon immediately after the jury which had been re-sworn to decide on the question whether or not Harold W. Vermilyea was capable of standing his trial and answering his charge, had heard medical testimony to the effect that he was fit to stand his trial and brought in a verdict that he was capable.

The halt had been caused when medical testimony had been submitted on the sanity of Vermilyea who is accused of slaying his mother with a hatchet.

Dr. Goldwin Howland, of Toronto, Dr. J. J. Robertson of Belleville, Dr. R. G. Armour of Ottawa and Dr. W. B. Mitchell of Montreal all swore on the question of present capability of the accused that he was fit to stand trial.

Dr. G. Howland was taken over by Crown Prosecutor Urquhart when the trial resumed and was subjected to a strong cross-examination. Urquhart was followed by Mr. Justice Jeffrey, who asked but three questions of the witness before he was allowed to leave the stand.

On the question of present capability to stand trial, medical testimony was given:

Dr. G. Howland on Stand

Dr. G. J. Robertson, Belleville, next witness stated that in his own opinion the accused, Vermilyea, was cognisant of the fact, that he was being tried for murder. The questions put to him by counsel could conduct his defence was given an affirmative answer. "Accused had a delusion, but sufficient reason to be able to direct his counsel through the trial," added Dr. Robertson.

Competent to Conduct

Dr. G. I. Armour, Toronto, with 20 years experience in the asylum (Continued on Page 3 Col. 3)

Fire Brigade Not Used to Eject Sleepers

London, Ont., Feb. 23—(CP)—The fire department has received many strange calls, but one which been called to put out fires, bring cats down off lofty telephone poles and to break into upper windows and unlock doors from the inside has never before been brought.

But today, Chief Charles Scott received such a complaint. He was requested to bring down a squad of men and eject a sleeper from a Richmond street home. A man using woman's voice asked the Chief to bring down to her home a man who was out a man, who had been sleeping there for several nights.

"We can't throw him out," replied the Chief. "We don't put men out. You had better call the police department or get a man to do the barn door."

Sudden Wealth for Being Honest Apparently Affects Man of Mind

New York, Feb. 22 (AP)—Frank Greges, 67 year old sandwich-sign man who gained fame and a better job by finding bonds worth $40,000 and returning them to the owner, went on a rampage early today in which he broke $1,000 worth of furniture.

"I am God," he shouted. "I can kill anyone who looked at me."

While police and a doctor were summoned, Greges, who lives in the sign carrier, a man identified as Robert E. Edwards of Ware, Mass., and Leo Alcorta of Chicago, smashed up the room and complained of feeling ill. Dr. Joseph Greges, Greges' physician, again, glaring at the newcomer. "I can kill anybody."

Edwards dropped dead.

Greges already had sent one man to a hospital with a push down a flight of stairs.

The man who had given Bowery bums their greatest inspiration of the winter was taken to a police station and held down by policemen until he could be removed to the psychopathic ward of Bellevue Hospital.

"I am God," he shouted as a crowd gathered. "Nothing is too good for me. The hat I wear is worth $15. I have my $1 shoes. Nothing is too good for me. I am God. I can kill anybody who looks at me."

"There are at me," he explained. "Ever since I've been in this job in Wall Street they stare at me all day."

"That's why I killed him.

I killed him because he had a bad day. I usually kill from 10 to 20 a day."

Edwards, a doctor said, had been in the last stage of tuberculosis. He was a man about 40 years old.

DR. R. G. ARMOUR SAYS VERMILYEA NOT PARANOIAC

Rebuttal Witness Claims Accused Has No Delusions

CASES OF COUSINS

Dr. Armour Testifies Vermilyea's Talk is Rational

Dr. Robt. G. Armour of Ottawa went to the witness stand on Saturday afternoon in the Vermilyea murder trial to testify in rebuttal.

The Ottawa physician-witness, a specialist in nervous and mental diseases was questioned closely by Crown Prosecutor Urquhart.

Witness had examined accused on the 27th of Oct, the 31st of Oct. and Feb. 13. This was an examination for sanity. About six hours altogether had been spent with accused.

Q. Were you able to form an opinion as to the accused at the time of the act, if he committed it? Was he sane? A. I believe he was.

Q. Was he in the state at the commission of the act laboring under a delusion? A. I do not think he would render him incapable of knowing this act was committed? A. I do not think so.

Witness added that accused was acutely conscious of what he was doing" when he did it. If he did do it. "Because he could tell me," he added, "all the other blows as she lay there, groaning. She was hit repeatedly." Witness told that the hatchet had been thrown away and then, according to the crown case, the man managed to get into the last after running away in a car. He was sane enough so as to try to excite the driver."

Witness discussed the plans said to have been made and the prearrangements alleged to exist. The evidence of the caretaker who had been installed, the messages Vermilyea is alleged to have left, the attempt alleged to erase records of the act by burning, and the suggestions in respect to ghosts. He could not remember names of doctors and witness as the Kingston physician. All this was read by witness from a medical case history as he proceeded.

"His memory was impaired; his conversation at times was not reliable; Harold Vermilyea carries on a logical, clearly understanded conversation. I see no comparison between accused and the cousins." This was in suggestion the accused has hallucinations of any sort."

Comment in Letter

In one letter of April 1, 1934, said to have been written by accused to his doctor pointed out by witness that it seemed as if a direct warning had been given. A sentence, according to be honest, "but the children will be the worst sufferers" was read.

The doctor being asked gave the opinion that Vermilyea could have accused if he committed the act then, first planned to get the money at his mother's death, a man who could plan a thing for months before hand and as he had done and then with a man could set aside all moral scruples and sense of reason.

The doctor said that Vermilyea had shown not the slightest indication of remorse.

Defence Objection

"Anything else?" asked Crown.

Witness continued that the accused showed a knowledge of right and wrong and had a sense of values.

Defense objected at this point to witness' opinion to give these statements "as to his opinion."

As to Knowledge of Values

Witness continued to recount his perusal of a letter purportedly written by accused. He pointed out references to the Dionne quintuplets and Dr. Dafoe, of small town Corbeil and conditions of the world.

This gives evidence that he knows moral values, when he says, "I love my brothers working so hard and when he refers to his own family, there is an appreciation of right and wrong there," the doctor said.

A letter of May 20th said to have been written by Vermilyea was identified by witness. This letter gave evidence of right and wrong and of normal capabilities.

Reference to Knee Jerks

Mr Urquhart referred to "knee jerks" said to be absent in accused. This is caused by a diseased portion of the area of the body at the lower end of the spine. Their presence or absence has nothing to do with sanity or a mental condition. These are as far away from the brain and intellect as you can get.

Col. Greer took the witness, "Just answer my questions," warned defence as he took up the questioning.

Q. Would syphilis affect the brain? A. Not necessarily so.

Q. And it would affect the lower end of the body about the lower part? A. Yes.

Q. Then what do you mean, that they affect the brain? A. They are removed from the brain?

Witness replied that the progression of the disease would be through the whole body.

Examination of Vermilyea

Witness on the stand told of stripping accused and examining him, but did not remember if he had found any scars. Persons with no knee jerks, are unusual, but the cause for their absence in the case accused was not known.

Q.—Now often do you appear in court? A.—Quite often.

Q.—Constantly? A.—No, not constantly.

32 Thumb in Court

Q.—Sir in 1934, how often were you in court?

A.—I don't know. Later he added he had in one spring been in the court 32 times between January and April. Witness said he had testified on mental cases. He added that there was a wide divergence between men versed in his study.

Q.—You may might even get up and appear against each other?

A.—Yes.

Q. And these points of difference are generally settled by the court? A. Are they should be "yes", agreed Col. Greer.

Opinion of Doctors

Q. You heard Dr. Mitchell's evidence this morning. Are you aware of what he would say? A. Not what he would say to you.

Q. His opinion was that accused was not a normal healthy man, do you agree? A. I do not.

Q. Or that he had an abnormal emotional nature? A. No, sir.

Q. You don't agree with Dr. Howland? A. No, neither his diagnosis or his prognosis. Accused was suffering from delusions.

Col. Greer referred to Dr. Robertson.

Q. Do you agree with him when he said that he considered accused the act he was insane? A. No, I do not.

Q. You don't agree with the opinion of any of the doctors? A. Not entirely.

Justice Jeffrey took witness as Col. Greer concluded.

"Do you believe if he did the act he knew he would be punished for that?" asked the court.

A.—Surely.

The taking of evidence was concluded at 2.45. After 4 o'clock court adjourned until Monday morning. Neither Crown nor defence addressed jury when the adjournment was made.

The petit jury held here since a week last Tuesday was discharged on Saturday afternoon.

Since early this morning a huge crowd has been waiting for the opening of the doors. Many of them carried bundles of paper wrapped lunches in their hands. While waiting for proceedings to open, many of the crowd watched the jury as the packed rows knit patiently on knitting and needlework.

Vermilyea still toils at case on his air cushion in the prisoner's dock, with his back to the jury and smiles occasionally. He glances around the crowded court room at times, returning the curious gaze of the spectators. Saturday the gum on which he usually chews steadily was missing. Col. Greer, defence counsel, as he entered, in the afternoon, engaged in a brief whispered conversation with the accused.

OVERACTIVITY IS DANGER SIGNAL

Should be Regarded as Symptom And Not Disease

New York, Feb. 23 (AP)—A child's overactivity is not a sign he is a little dynamo physically, as parents believe, but a danger signal.

Studies of such children showing physical causes were not chiefly responsible, were reported to the American Orthopsychiatric Association here today by Dr. Abner L. Childers, psychiatrist at the Central Clinic, Cincinnati.

Overactivity, he said should be regarded as a symptom and not a disease. It appears in about 10 per cent of children admitted to Child Guidance Clinics.

It reveals itself in such things as over-talkativeness, boastfulness, distractions, attention-getting and restless sleep. More rarely as fight-ing, destructiveness and cruelty.

AEROPLANE IS LOST

Might be From Squadron of British Ships at Manoeuvres

New York, Feb. 23 (CP)—Seven vessels were in distress today, with the possibility one of them had gone to the bottom after its crew was rescued, and an aeroplane was reported to have crashed in flames into the sea.

Four of the ships were trapped by a gale in the notoriously stormy Bay of Biscay and two on coasts off the coast of Japan. The plane, unidentified, was said to have plunged to destruction in the Dutch East Indies. An oyster sloop went aground on a gale on Long Island.

The 5,590-ton British steamer Dunbar Castle was the biggest victim. It struck a reef a mile and a half off Bonne Peninsula, outside Cape Race.

Fishing boats and larger craft, including a Japanese destroyer, hurried to answer its cry: "Lying in dangerous position. Need immediate

Vermilyea Defence Rests Doctors Give Testimony As to Accused's Sanity

Dr. Mitchell for Crown Calls Accused Sane at Time

DEFENCE SAYS 'INSANE'

Dr. Robertson Swears Vermilyea Admitted 'Trip East'

Dr. W. B. Mitchell, of Montreal, giving medical evidence in the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea on the charge of murder of his mother last October, today stated that accused was not insane at the time of the slaying. Mr. Mitchell had examined Vermilyea on October 28th in the Bell Farm.

Mr. Mitchell declared that Vermilyea was emotionally unstable, impulsive and very egocentrical.

Dr. J. J. Robertson for the defence had previously stated that Vermilyea was insane at the time of the death and testified that in January while he was making an examination of Vermilyea, the accused man told him he had been carrying over a "conspiracy" and that he came east to verify "that conspiracy and that you know what I did."

Trial Moves Rapidly

The trial today moved rapidly to its conclusion Saturday as the defence called but a single witness. Dr. Robertson, a schoolmate of Vermilyea's; Dr. G. Howland, of Toronto, was the only other witness for the defence, he was heard Friday.

Vermilyea did not go on the stand to testify in his own defence.

The Crown at once began the introduction of rebuttal testimony.

Defence Rests

The defence in the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea, charged with the hatchet slaying of his aged mother last October 4, rested its case at 11.02 a.m.

Dr. J. J. Robertson, school-year acquaintance of the accused man, was the sole defence witness today. He testified Vermilyea was insane.

Dr. Robertson, a school year acquaintance of the accused man, said he felt his family held a conspiracy against him.

Dr. Robertson said Vermilyea had set about to rectify this conspiracy, thinking he was the only one with virile guidance." Vermilyea had not used that phrase, Dr. Robertson said, but the doctor said he had come to that conclusion after examining him.

Accused's Business Life

The medical witness said Vermilyea had described to him his early life which took him to Montreal, western Canada and the United States where he had been employed by Bell Calif.

The Crown alleges Vermilyea came from the California city to Belleville, slew his aged mother, Mrs. Annie Vermilyea, with a hatchet, and returned to his United States home by automobile and aeroplane.

A. A. Payne, examining Dr. Robertson, asked him:

"As the result of your examination of the accused, have you formed upon your long knowledge of the accused, did you arrive at any finding regarding his sanity?"

Believes Man Insane

"I most assuredly believe he was insane man," Dr. Robertson answered.

G.W. Urquhart, cross-examining Dr. Robertson, asked:

"When Mr. Vermilyea struck his mother with the axe, he knew he might kill her?"

Dr. Robertson said he believed he did.

"Did he think this act for which he was liable for arrest?"

"I believe he thought he might know this was punishable, but that he was justified in so doing."

It was expected the addresses to the jury would be made Monday.

Mr. Justice Jeffrey will charge the jury Monday morning.

Dr. Robertson, school fellow of Vermilyea, took the stand at the Vermilyea murder trial today to testify on the accused's mental condition.

He was examined by Mr. Arthur A. Payne, K.C., associate counsel for the defence, in connection with medical disorders. He said that he had been specializing in medicine for twenty-nine years and a half and had studied for three years under Dr. C. K. Clark, superintendent of the Kingston Asylum. He was frequently called in on cases of wills where it is necessary to judge on the mentality of patients and their ability to execute wills.

"I knew him at Albert College when we were students," the doctor replied when asked as to his acquaintance with Vermilyea. "He was at boarding college many years ago. Witness spoke of Vermilyea just as a casual friend with no outstanding traits.

Dr. Robertson had seen him once 10 or 11 years ago at the time of the funeral of the father of the accused.

Dr. Robertson referred to accused having an impediment in his speech during earlier school days. He also had suffered from what he had seen him 10 or 11 years ago.

Q.—Any reason for the absence of it at this time?

Witness testified that on January 7 he had given accused a clinical examination. Witness said accused had told him of having a form of rheumatism in his feet. It took Arthur, I could find no destruction—no evidence of arthritis, except for area near the hip joint which might produce pain."

Doctor's View of Brace

Witness told of the brace worn by accused. He told him this brace was more of an inconvenience than anything else. He told them that only certain doctors were competent to deal with this condition.

Witness, sitting in a chair provided for him, told of further tests he had given accused. He reflexes taken disclosed that a pupil of the eye reacted as it did in a normal condition. "His arm reflexes were normal. But his knee jerks to the act a reflex in either the knee or ankle."

Q.—These were negative? A.—They were absent.

Second Examination

The second examination of accused had been made on January 30 in the County Jail. "This had been

CALLED TWICE TO CITY YARD

The local fire department answered three calls, all of a minor nature yesterday, no serious damage being reported, however. Twice the department was called to the local city yard on Pinnacle St., where tar, that was being boiled, caught fire and endangered the equipment housed there. Each time the department arrived in time to check the blaze promptly.

A chimney fire at 185 Albert St. constituted the remaining call of the day. No damage other than automatic was incurred.

TRAFFIC HELD UP BY CAR COLLISION

A short congestion of motor traffic on Front Street happened about 1:05 p.m. today when three automobiles were implicated in a minor accident, no injuries being sustained and only one fender damage resulting. According to local police, who investigated, Andrew Aikman, Morrisburg, was proceeding south on King Street at the intersection of No. 1 Belleville, started to back out from the west curb. Aikman reversed his car to the left to avoid a rear-end collision with the Spencer car and in so doing collided with an automobile being driven northward by James A. Dicks, R. R. No. 3 Belleville. All vehicles were proceeding at a slow rate of speed which considerably reduced the damage. The left front fenders and hub caps of the Aikman and Dicks cars were damaged. The matter of damages was adjusted and settled between the parties concerned.

Bridge Bidding Under Discussion

By TOM O'NEIL
(American Press Staff Writer)

New York, Feb. 23 (AP)—War has broken out again among systems of bidding at contract bridge.

Having won more team titles than any bar, that seems to make "Four Aces" who believe they did better than anybody else in the world, propose to tell why in speech and written word.

P. Hal Sims, author and lecturer, and Mrs. Sims, author, have a date to play 1400 rubbers next month against Ely Culbertson, author and lecturer, and Mrs. Culbertson, author, as will the rest of the Sims and Culbertson systems.

And what do the "Aces" think of their rivals?

"Listen," said Oswald Jacoby, their spokesman, "any two of the five members of our team will take on any two of that Sims-Culbertson conglomeration and stop coupling Sims and Culbertson themselves as partners, and play them for any amount of money and give them a handicap."

That system rejects the honor trick values of Culbertson and the primary trick values of Sims and has as a basis a point count of three for an ace, two for a king, one for a queen and one-half for a jack.

TO OPEN LETTERS AT THE INQUEST

Health of Girls, Who Jumped From Plane Was Excellent

Upminster, Essex, England, Feb. 23 (AP)—A complete post-mortem on the bodies of Jane and Susan Du Bois who plunged to their deaths from an aeroplane Thursday, indicated both girls had been in excellent health, it was disclosed today.

The autopsies were performed last night, while Coert Du Bois, United States Consul General at Naples, and Mrs. Du Bois, the girls' parents, were on their way to England. They were performed on the coroner's orders by Dr. M. L. Hearle, Upminster physician, who made an external examination before the bodies were removed from the death scene.

While it was feared the post-mortem indicated the two girls were in good health, the complete results could not be officially announced prior to the inquest.

Dr. Hearle said the girls left in the transport plane they chartered for their last flight will be opened at the coroner's inquest at Romney, Monday.

Life of Lincoln Told by Speaker

J. O. Herity Gives Vivid Picture of Great States-man

The Anti-Anti Young Men's Class of the Baptist Church held their monthly dinner last evening in the Sunday School room.

Mr. Gordon Bray introduced the guest speaker for the occasion, Mr. J. O. Herity, Secretary-Manager Belleville Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Herity proved without a doubt, that he is worthy of his name, that of a gifted speaker. His topic was "Abraham Lincoln."

In opening his address, Mr. Herity quoted: "Great Leaders come from Great Movements and conversely Great Movements come from Great Leaders." Verily by this reference to Themistocles the Greek, Hannibal, who led the Greeks to a victory at Marathon 490 B.C. over the tyranny of Persia, Wellington and Nelson, who led the British forces against the conquering of Napoleon, and coming down to more modern times Abraham Lincoln, who rose to be a great leader, who led a civil movement against slavery.

Abraham Lincoln was born in a log cabin near Hodgenville, Kentucky. Lincoln's family was very poor, Lincoln lived on the bare necessities of life. The log cabin had one window, it is said the floor was of earth. Today the cabin still stands. The whole Lincoln property today in the form of a park belongs to the U. S. Government.

Lincoln was a self-taught man. One year, he didn't have the opportunity to go to school. However, he was possessed with a real ambition to become great. He used to walk many miles to the Rev. David Elkens just for the opportunity of borrowing books. Lincoln's personal library at first contained only three books, James I's version of the Holy Bible, a catechism and a spelling book. Lincoln knew nearly every word of the Bible and could recite from memory many passages from Shakespeare's plays and most of Robbie Burn's poems.

Self-Educated

Lincoln was self-educated. Mr. Herity brought out the fact that many great men were self-educated. Thomas Edison who became the greatest inventor in the world, William Shakespeare, the world's greatest dramatist and Robbie Burns, Scotland's greatest lyric poet. Mr. Herity impressed the fact, that by sheer determining education. He thought it was possible to overcome the trouble is most students don't appreciate the value of it.

The Lincoln family moved to Indiana, Illinois, and here at the cabin studied law. It was while going down the Mississippi to New Orleans with his cargo that he grew in Lincoln the hatred of slavery. He resented, that the opportunity ever came to him he would abolish slavery.

President in 1861

Lincoln entered the legislature at 25. He was elected President in 1861 on a Republican ticket, and was President during the trying years of the Civil War.

On Nov. 19th, 1863 a meeting was held on Gettysburg battlefield to dedicate the battle. People came from far and near because the President was going to speak. They were disappointed. Lincoln only spoke for three minutes. Today on the same spot, there stands a monument in the form of a restrum with Lincoln's statue on it. It has cost the U. S. Government over a quarter million dollars. On a tablet at the side is Lincoln's speech. That speech is known the world over and is the greatest English oration ever spoken. Lincoln was assassinated in a theatre at Washington by an assassin, John Wilkes Booth.

At the conclusion of his address, Mr. Herity produced a replica of Lincoln's log cabin home, a bottle of earth taken from Lincoln's homestead, and a priceless copy of the New York Herald dated April 15, 1865, the day after Lincoln's assassination. On the top of the column about his death is the word: "Important" so that every American citizen might not forget to read about the death of their greatest statesman and friend, whose career is the basis of every boy's dream.

Mr. Bert Orr, President of the Anti-Can't Class thanked Mr. Herity for his splendid address.

Only three transients put in an appearance at the police station last night in quest of a warm night's lodging, this being the smallest number to be booked at the sergeant's desk, with one exception, this year. The sudden drop in temperature and last night's snow storm are attributed the reasons for the falling off of transients.

No vehicles were necessary in Belleville during the past 24 hours, the call block being empty except for the housing of the three transients. A bicycle, the property of John Reginald of this city, reported stolen on Thursday night, was recovered by the police yesterday. The "bike" was returned to its rightful owner today.

Although some little ice makes motor travel somewhat hazardous on out-going highways, no serious motor accidents were reported.

William A. Parker Retires After Lengthy Banking Career

Manager of Royal Bank in City Since 1919

BORN IN STIRLING

RETIRING

W. A. Parker leaves banking life but will continue to reside in this city.

Concluding over forty years in the banking profession, the service of Parker, manager of the local branch of the Royal Bank of Canada since 1919, is retiring from the active ranks of the bank this month after a very distinguished career in its service. During his years in the city, Mr. Parker has had the confidence of hundreds of depositors and the business of this district generally, who will learn with regret of the dicision of his association with the bank.

Born in Stirling Mr. Parker is the son of the late Robert Parker, M.D. He entered banking in 1894 with Parker Bros., private bankers, who later sold the business to the Dominion Bank of Canada. In 1902 Mr. Parker joined the Traders' Bank of Canada, which was later merged with the Royal Bank of Canada. He has represented the bank in the capacity of manager at various branches from Montreal to Vancouver and came to Belleville on the opening of the branch of the Royal Bank of Canada here in 1919.

Interest in City

During his residence in the city Mr. Parker has been closely identified with its activities, giving generously of his time in the support of movements in community welfare. For several years he has been a member of the Board of Directors of the Chamber of Commerce of which he is a past president.

A member of the Bay of Quinte Country Club, Mr. Parker is an ardent golfer and a lover of sport. He is also a member of the Belleville Club. His many friends in the city will be glad to learn, that Mr. Parker will continue to reside here.

His Successor

I. G. Hefkey of the Supervisors' Department of the Royal Bank of Canada, Toronto, is succeeding W. A. Parker as manager of the Belleville Branch of the bank. He has been previously connected with over twenty branches which include Ottawa and the Head Office at Montreal. His broad experience fits him for him a successful career in this city.

Mr. Hefkey is a keen sportsman, a member of the Masonic Lodge and a prominent Rotarian. For five years until December Mr. Hefkey was manager of the Royal Bank of Canada in Bournanville and while there took an active interest in the many organizations of which he was a member. Previous to his departure the Bournanville Rotary Club paid tribute to his outstanding work as secretary, and member of the Board of Directors. He was presented with a beautiful nest of walnut tables.

At this meeting Fred Hoar in addressing the Club lauded Mr. Parker's efforts in the interests of Montreal as a citizen, as both as a member of Rotary and also as a business man and friend. F. C. McIlveen, manager of the Bank of Montreal reads also of the fine spirit which had existed among the bankers of the town during Mr. Hefkey's term of office here. He then made the presentation on behalf of the club.

President Fred Cryderman also spoke briefly in appreciation of Mr. Hefkey's services. In reply Mr. Hefkey stated that during his four years of membership in the club he had made some of the happiest friendships of his life. It had been a pleasure, and a great honor he said, to belong to Rotary International, an organization which says great dividends in good fellowship and friendship than any other organization. He expressed his appreciation of the kind remembrance of the club and assured them that he would carry away with him very pleasant memories of the past few years. Tribute was also paid to Mrs. Hefkey by President Cryderman, who concluded the presentation by wishing both Mr. and Mrs. Hefkey God Speed and Goodbye.

The Bowmanville Bowling Club of which he was secretary-treasurer honored him by presenting to him a handsome sterling silver engraved cigarette case, reference being made to his sportsmanship and worth to the club. ANNUAL BANQUET HELD BY SCOUTS

3rd Belleville Troop Entertain Parents as Birthday Gift

Last evening at St. George's Mission the 3rd Belleville Boy Scouts had their Mothers' and Parents' Night Banquet commemorating the birthday of the Chief Baden Powell. There was a large gathering of the boys' parents present when were first entertained by a camp fire scene by the scouts. The camp fire program consisted of songs, musical numbers and demonstration of scout work. Musical selections were put on by A.P.L's T. Wilkinson, N. Lancaster and Scout Grant. The most important item of the camp fire was the presentation of an Assistant Scout Masters warrant to Fred Churchill by Scoutmaster Varley. Mr. Churchill was highly praised by Scoutmaster Varley for his success in securing this warrant. The last item on the local programme was the investing of Jack Moon as Troop Leader.

The whole banquet started at nine. The chairman of the evening was Mr. Tom Marshall, who gave an address of welcome to the visitors followed by a toast to the King. Mr. Marshall in his short address highly praised Scoutmaster Varley for his fine work with the Boy Scouts. The toast to the Chief Scout of the world and the Chief Scout of Canada was proposed by Scoutmaster Varley. This was answered by Mr. C. H. Bell who was also the chief speaker of the evening. Mr. Bell gave a very interesting account of the life of Sir Baden Powell.

Mr. Bell has undertaken to build up the scout movement in Belleville and in his address he remarks mentioned that the chief aim of the scouts in Belleville was more good leaders.

The toast to the Scouts of the world was proposed by Mr. A. G. M. Fred Churchill which was responded to by Mr. R. T. Wensley. The toast to the visitors was proposed by Troop Leader Jack Moon and was responded to by Rev. Wright. Rev. Mr. Wright was the last speaker of the evening and gave the boys and their parents a very inspiring message. The banquet was then closed by singing "The End of a Boy Scout" followed by a short prayer by the Rev. Wright.

GOOD HOCKEY AT CARRYING PLACE

Lose to Wooler But Defeat Frankford in Week End Games

Carrying Place, Feb. 23— Local hockeyists won one and lost one over the week end, going down to ignominious defeat at the hands of the Woolerites on Friday evening, but coming back on Monday to take the wavering Frankford team 3-0. Friday's game was well worth watching in spite of the score. Although they dominated the play for much of the game the La Tour coached clan could not get into dangerous scoring positions very often, owing mostly to the sturdiness of the yellow and green defence. On the other hand two rather "soft" shots got past La Morre to boost the Wooler tally, much to his own disgust. The last goal of the game was a very pretty one, a Wooler man batting in a rebound from one of his teammate's shots. On Monday evening Frankford, scheduled to meet the locals at Trenton arena at 7.15 failed to get all their men or equipment on hand until nearly an hour after game time. Three fifteen-minute periods were played, however, with the locals taking the lead after a few minutes of play when Johnson poked the puck into the net between the goalie's legs during a scramble in front of the goal. "Pat" Hicks, Eddie Quackenbush and Harold Herrington each went into the game for some minutes, Hicks getting most of the work to do and showing up very well as compared with the Trenton players who comprise most of the team. On Friday of this week Cities Service furnish the opposition. Tuesday's fine weather brought hopes of summer again to people chilled by the razor-keen winds of winter. How sincerely many of us are hoping that the back of the winter is broken, especially in view of the fact that most coal bins are getting near the low mark. However we still have blustery March to reckon with, and it is not to be supposed that he will let us off without giving us a final dose of frost and snow.

Mrs. Robert Dempsey and son returned to their home here more than a week ago from Toronto. Since that time Mrs. Dempsey's parents and family, Mr. and Mrs. George Hardy and Miss Eleanor and Mr. George Hardy Jr., have spent some days visiting the Dempsey's.

Illness of his father in the city called Mr. Willie Cannon to Toronto last week. Mr. Cannon has been employed at the Harbour Stables during the past winter season.

Soft weather and resulting soft and slushy ice conditions necessitated the cancellation of the Carrying Place-Cities Service hockey game scheduled for Friday evening last. However, with cooler weather arriving over the week end the game was played on Monday, and the La Tour sponsored clan romped home to an exciting if not extremely easy victory by a 6-3 score. Last week the local team was tied with Cities Service and Trent Cottons for third place in the loop. This win boosts our team a step more and gives us real hopes that they will be in at the play-offs.

Peculiar Accident

Quite the strangest accident reported locally in some time took place at a home on the north shore of the Bay of Quinte early last week. A dental plate from which the clasps were broken was the cause of trouble aplenty. A resident put it into his mouth before going to do his day's work. A lusty cough proved his undoing, however, for with the intake of breath the plate with its four teeth was sucked into the unfortunate man's throat. Part way down it stuck securely; and when he was rushed to a hospital doctors grappled and probed for it ineffectually. Next day a hearty meal pushed it on down into the stomach, and today the victim of the accident is home again, quite recovered from ill effects.

Mr. Everett "Bus" Weller is working at the Hinds and Dauch paper mill in Trenton. He has been employed there for several weeks.

The Hanthorn-owned saw has been busy in the community for the past month. On Tuesday it was at the Harris home. With wood in demand and wood prices high, farmers are cutting rather more than usual from their wood lots, and the saw receives an increasing number of calls correspondingly.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Norrington and Barry spent the week end with Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Courneyea and family in Peterboro.

Miss Nora Hennessey spent several days visiting in town last week.

Mrs. E. H. Hennessey plans a trip to Detlor by train on Wednesday of this week. Mr. Hennessey has been there since New Year's Day and has sent out a large supply of wood.

Friends of Mrs. Horatio Grounds in Gardenville are very sorry indeed to hear of her severe illness. Recently Mrs. Grounds underwent still another operation at Kingston General Hospital, and though her condition now is reported as improved, it is still causing grave concern.

Another Gardenville lady well know locally who is suffering poor health is Mrs. J. A. Dymond. Mrs. Dymond also has had a recent operation, and her speedy recovery is hopped for.

A jolly Valentine party was held in the junior classroom of the local school on Thursday afternoon last, Valentine's Day, when pupils of the junior room entertained as their guests the senior pupils and supplied a delightful programme. With Billy Moynes as chairman the events followed one after another in interesting parade. Among the numbers on the programme were a reading by Wallace Brooks, recitations by Dorothy Herrington, Freddie Moynes, and others a story by Annie Bateman, a reading by Erma Gould, several jolly contests, a "backwards" spelling match, a "fruit" and an "apple" contest, a song by Barry Norrington and another by Frank Moynes, and last a dainty lunch with the distribution of the Valentine mail. This kept eight busy postmen on the run for a half hour while those seated munched candy and picked peanuts from their shells. At the end of that time the senior room pupils thanked their entertainers and sang lustily "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows."

A social evening sponsored by Messrs. Sauve and Hayes was presented in St. John's Parish Hall on Friday evening last.

Coert Du Bois, United States Consul General at Naples, father of the young women, who plunged to their deaths yesterday from an aeroplane, was enroute here with his grief-stricken wife to receive his daughters' messages.

The two notes were found on a seat of the airliner after the sisters had leaped from it at an altitude of 3,000 feet over Upminster, Essex.

A witness of the sisters' horrifying death leap disclosed today further details of the strange dual suicide. The source of the information was Frank Solomon, who was standing in a cabbage patch at Upminster, when the two human plummets hurtled from the sky and struck the ground near him.

"I was standing drinking my tea," he said, "when something flashed past my eye and I heard a violent thump. I looked around and saw what appeared to be two girls lying asleep, faces downward.

Driven Into Ground

"They lay side by side, hands clasped and looked just as if they were taking a rest. The force of their fall had driven them eight inches into the ground, but there was no blood."

The notes addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Du Bois, which Jane and Elizabeth left behind, were reported to have explained, that they wished to die because two young Royal Air Force aviators in whom they were interested, perished in an air disaster at Messina, Sicily, last week.

The young women were said to have been "informally engaged" to the two fliers, Flight Lieutenant Henry Longfield Beatty and Flying Officer John A. C. Forbes.

Dr. S Blakeley of Bedfordshire, said his daughter Kathleen was engaged to Forbes and that their marriage was to have taken place after the aviator's return from Singapore in April. Mrs. Harold Lett, mother of Beatty, said in Dublin that her son had written of his acquaintance with the Du Bois girls but that she knew nothing of any romance.

mental diseases stated from the stand, that accused had been able to converse freely with him and was fully acquainted with aspects of the case.

"He is competent to conduct his trial," witness stated.

Dr. W. B. Mitchell, Montreal, with 18 years' experience in mental illness, examined the prisoner in October last.

Q. In your opinion is he capable of proceeding with his trial and conducting his defence? A. Yes.

In answer to a question by Col. Greer, Dr. Mitchell said the examination of accused held in Belleville had occupied 5 hours.

Q. Did you test for knee jerks? A. I made a complete mental examination—no physical examination. Witness added, that he had not arrived at any conclusion at the time. Defence stressed the point. "Did you test for knee jerks, yes or no? A. No Sir.

Halt is Called

An abrupt halt was called. Justice Jeffrey instructed the jury at this point:

"Gentlemen of the jury, this decision of yours is concerned merely with the question of whether the accused has sufficient mental ability to stand his trial. I don't know if you need to retire on this question but I believe you had better. You will return with the answer to this simple question and inform the court of your finding."

The jury then retired at 4 p.m.

Took Five Minutes

Only five minutes were needed for the jury to decide.

"Gentlemen of the jury, have you decided if the accused is able to stand trial?" asked Mr. Justice Jeffrey.

"We have," replied the foreman. "And is he able?". A. Yes.

"So say you all?"

"Yes."

Defence counsel immediately called Dr. Howland, psychiatrist to the stand.

Q. You said, Doctor, when this man committed the act—if he did commit it—that he was insane. A. Yes.

Q. If he did commit it, did he appreciate the act?. A. No Sir.

Mr. Urquhart, Crown prosecutor, in taking the witness asked the definition of "psychosis." "It is disease of the mind." witness replied. Witness further pointed out that psychopathology was a division of diseases of the mind. "I wouldn't say that a psychopathic was not entirely too abnormal." Some people he told with this trend were merely afraid of heights and other minor feelings. There are three great types. The accused has the paranoid type, which might develop into a dementia praecox.

Mr. Urquhart led the witness through explanations of delusions allegedly held by the accused man. Witness and Crown met difficulty exacting defining this. "This man believed his sister and her aunt were forming a conspiracy against him. This was a delusion," explained the medico.

Facts Not Delusion

Q. If it was true that these two ladies were conspiring against him, as a result, he was being driven insane? A. You must look upon it, too, that this was forming in his mind. Witness explained further, that an idea based on facts is not a delusion.

Q. How is accused deteriorating, mentally? In what way? A. Instead of using judgment and reason, which are the highest forms of intelligence—he feels that he has done right.

Percentage Large

Mr. Urquhart turned to antecedents of the family but was met with an objection by defence, when the question of percentages of those developing senility and had committed suicide. Finally witness answered, that the percentage was believed by him to be large. He did not see the full family tree submitted. That tree, he said, had not been complete, but it had impressed him by its large percentage of those who had met unfortunate endings.

Had a Plan

Prosecution changes.

Q. If he did commit this crime, he knew if he hit his mother with an axe, he would kill her? A. Yes.

Q. In your opinion did the accused premeditate this crime? A. There is a possibility. I do not think he acted on impulse. It was further added, that a lunatic would have to have a plan, the same as anyone else.

Justice Jeffrey interposed to clear the question: "Was his line of conduct such as to lead to the evidence of sanity or insanity?

In answer witness said that throughout the plan there had been good evidence of paranoidal acts. Mr. Urquhart referred to the taxi in which accused was alleged to have entered Belleville. The plans, suggested Crown, which included the cab had been pre-arranged. Witness said, that it all pointed to the acts of a paranoiac. A message left caretaker Swayne, was described by witness as being "rather foolish."

Important Link.

Crown sought to show his message would be an important link if the accused had committed the act and had escaped the consequences of it.

Q. If he was to escape with this cab, it would be necessary to make sure the cab was alright, so on the night of Oct. 4 he returned to the cab, said "Hello, John". A. Yes.

Witness added that a clever criminal or a sane man would act the same way, but it all indicated paranoidal tendencies. Booking at the hotel under an assumed name would also be included in this.

The accused man's depression period had started in 1932, witness corroborated.

Q. And it was nothing unusual for a father being despondent when out of a job as he was and was having difficulties? A. No, we all get depressed at times.

Q. The delusion of conspiracy spoken of did not include the mother? A. No.

Witness added here that a paranoid type sometimes would turn his love and affection for dear ones to "intense hatred". This, he said, could be supported by evidence.

No Delusions of Mother.

Justice Jeffrey brought out from witness accused had had no delusion regarding his mother. The delusion held was that his mother was a "dupe" being fooled by these people (the aunt and his sister).

Witness then explained that if the man had the idea of killing, he (witness) should suspect that a type of this sort would have killed his sister or his aunt. He believed that accused, when he bought the hatchet, "had planned some damage". There was no evidence of hate in any of the letters.

Q. He stood to make no profit by killing his sister or aunt, witness agreed.

Q. If he did this act and he didn't know this act was wrong, why did he run away? Witness cited all the arrangements, blankets, cabs, trains, etc. "These appear to be the actions of a paranoid.

Paranoid Act.

Witness again pointed out paranoid types. "A criminal paranoid will copy the acts of a real criminal, but it will be a crazy copy."

Mr. Urquhart pointed out that the accused had changed his plans at times on the night of the escape.

Would Follow Plan.

Q. Don't you think he would know he would be arrested if he hung around here? A. A paranoid would follow his arranged plan all through with determination.

"A paranoid is not always a mental defective; sometimes he is uncannily clever."

Justice Jeffrey: "Why did he erase the only evidence in Fontaine's garage, that he was connected with the car?" A. A paranoid would do it, the same as any other man.

"I'm not stating the man knew right from wrong. He had the plan, I think, and carried it through, if he did the act.

A telegram addressed to Mrs. (Dr.) Faulkner from California purported to be from the accused relating to the first intimation he said he had of the crime, was shown Dr. Howland. After study, the witness pointed out the exhibit only corroborated his opinion that the man was still following his plan. One sentence plainly pointed to the "grandeur delusion" he said accused possessed. Time after time witness repeated the whole plan was "a paranoid plan".

The letters previously identified as having been sent from California by accused and produced were spoken of by witness as thus: "If I ever sent letters to my mother like that, she'd want to have me examined." A ripple of laughter from the audience relieved the tension.

Went Over Letters.

Crown Prosecutor Urquhart went over the letters carefully. Witness described them as "silly".

References to the children of the accused contained "were not logical". The letters were "a little high flown for a lady of 85" again said witness at another point.

A brief recess for the jury was allowed at this point.

Worried About Work

Dr. Howland resumed the stand and the questioning was taken by Col. Greer.

Q—In looking at the reports of these two cousins, (insane), I find that in the case of Gerald, he was worried about getting no work— his high blood pressure. Fred became despondent over a loss? Is this generally the first symptoms? A—It is when they start brooding, that the trouble develops.

A—Paranoid will generally show up at an earlier age, he added.

Egotism Shines Through

Gerald had been afflicted with dementia praecox, of the paranoid type. "The paranoids become in time, dementia praecox cases."

Q—This man, it being presumed he did the crime, executed a plan from the time he left California, until he got back? A—He had it before he started. This type continue to plan even after they are committed to an institution. They do not plan the same as a normal man; their egotism shines through their plans all through.

Col. Greer referred to the man's apparent unconcern over being recognized on the train. "Would that be any indication of a paranoid carrying out a plan? A—It appeared to me the criminal element might be absent here."

Justice Jeffrey read evidence of the questions and answers of Fontaine, the Los Angeles garage owner referring to the man asking information about records kept of the stored car. "He said this car was supposed to be in use while here'" Then followed detailed evidence of the man erasing records of the car. When this was done, Justice Jeffrey noted the man's anxiety to do this. "Do you still say this man had no knowledge of an offence? Witness started twice to answer but was interrupted by the court. Finally he answered, "I think it was quite within the case, that he planned this commission.

Q. But do you still say he had no thought in his mind, that he had done wrong? A. I would say no man could say.

Q. Having regard to all that was done, assume for a moment, that he was a paranoid why did he remove those marks from the blotter? To avoid suspicion?

A. I would say that was a simple answer, but I can't say it was correct.

Justice Jeffrey referred again to Swayne (caretaker) and accused being informed of the crime. He had said "Oh my God" when told by Swayne, that some news "not so bright was given" him. It was pointed out that a newspaper had been given the man identified as Vermilyea carrying the account of his mother's assault. Accused was then said to have altered his plan. "Did he recover his sanity at one o'clock that morning? He might then have become conscious of the act."

Witness was then excused by adjournment until Saturday morning at 9.30.

PLANTING OF TREES

Mayor Wenige of London, Ont., has suggested that 100,000 trees be planted to commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession of King George and Queen Mary. In some places the idea is looked upon with favor, especially in London which is known for its trees as "the forest city." Niagara Falls Review considers the suggestion as worthy of being followed in Niagara Falls, remarking "When one travels through some beautiful towns and cities the impression which remains is of the fine trees which shade the thoroughfares." The Review would like to see the children who will have a holiday on the anniversary, take part in the planting of trees on this memorable occasion.

Planting of trees is a fine suggestion especially for those cities and towns which are rather sparse of trees. Belleville has already a forest of trees, and if trees were to be planted they would have to be set out on an approach to some important building or public property or on those streets not now overgrown with foliage in the growing season.

Individual citizens might well think over the matter of tree planting on their lawns. The anniversary comes at a time of the year when planting is possible. It would be a fine means of making the occasion one to be remembered—to be able to say or have said many years from now, "That tree on the centre lawn was planted in 1935 at the time of the commemoration of the 25th anniversary of the accession of His Majesty King George and Queen Mary."

NEW ADMINISTRATION

It was this week that a Liberal Administration made its first appearance in Queen's Park, Toronto, in many years. The reversal of the conditions with the overthrow last June put into power the Hepburn Government. Since then there have been many events pass and since has been much discussion of provincial matters and now the people of Ontario are to see the representatives in office.

A great deal of attention has focussed on the new administration not only because the change drew sufficient attention in itself but also from the fact that a thirty year gap in a party's appearances in power has meant vast changes. New problems come to face the Government which the Ross administration, which left Queen's Park in the year 1905 knew nothing of. The time is a real test of the leaders of the governmental party and of his Government to administer affairs.

GAELS IN CANADA

"That there are large numbers of Celts in Canada everybody knows and that a predominating contingent of them hail from north of the Tweed is attested both by their accent and their aggressive conduct. This latter trait owes much to its Scottish settlers, who are of the Celtic race of Celts in origin. But what is not so well known is that large numbers of Highlanders still retain with a deeper pride and affection for their home land, but their mother tongue as well," says the Hamilton Spectator. Corpording to a return published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, there are over 32,000 people in Canada who speak Gaelic, and even this figure does not include all who speak that language. Over 24,000 of them are to be found in Nova Scotia and 9,500 in the county of Inverness alone, representing 60 per cent. of the total Gaelic speakers in the Dominion. In Cape Breton county there are about 8,400, 3,000 in Victoria, 1,500 in Antigonish and 1,000 in Richmond. Of these Gaelic speakers, 31,000 are Scots, 29,000 of these having been born in this Dominion and 2,600 coming here as immigrants.

"According to this report "Gaelic is spoken in every part of British North America from Newfoundland to the Yukon." There are 2,700 Gaelic-speaking people in Ontario, over a thousand in Prince Edward Island, nearly a thousand in Quebec, approximately another thousand in Saskatchewan, over 800 in British Columbia and more than 700 in Alberta.

"It is curious to find that the proportion of Canadian Scots who speak Gaelic is almost as high as in Scotland itself. In the latter country in 1931, 2.82 per cent. of the total population spoke Gaelic, and there were 2.80 per cent. of the persons of Scottish origin in Canada in that year who spoke Gaelic as their mother tongue, while the number would have been much larger "if every person who could speak Gaelic as acquired language had been enumerated as such." There is no evidence of decline in these statistics, though it is not possible to say whether the Gaelic-speaking population is increasing or decreasing, because prior to 1931 no special tabulation had been made."

REDUCING RURAL FIRES

Townships of Kent are becoming keenly interested in the purchase of fire fighting equipment to reduce rural fire losses. South Harwich was the first to adopt the idea. Howard is now falling in line, and it is reported that Oxford may take similar steps to report farm property. Farmers of Kent are thereby showing a progressive spirit. Moreover, this plan is already paying dividends in this country in lossprevention which has been effected.—Chatham News.

GRADE CROSSING ACCIDENTS

The crash at Kakabeka Falls, near Fort William, in which ten men were fatally injured when a truck in which they were riding collided with a Canadian National Railways train, on a level crossing, once more emphasizes the necessity of exercising the utmost precaution when approaching these death-traps.

There are motorists, apparently, who simply cannot get it into their heads that it takes a speeding train only a moment to pass a level crossing. Yet they persist in risking their lives every day in the year in trying to beat the engine to it. Most times they succeed but frequently they do not, as evidenced by the steadily mounting death toll at these danger points.

So long as the grade crossing menace is permitted to exist, so long will there be fatalities. But if motorists use ordinary precautions and refrain from taking reckless chances against the greatest odds there will not be so many of them.—Guelph Mercury.

ENGLISH COMMUNIST POETS

For ten years Mr. T. S. Eliot was the lord of English poetry. The earlier Georgian bucolic pipe was thrown away. Enraptured with Eliot, the young singers wandered through the "Waste Land. Wearied at length of Sweeney and J. Alfred Prufrock, Mr. Eliot turned to religion. Sorrowfully some of his followers left him, though still more or less subject to his technique. Mr. Francis Watson tells in his Nineteenth Century about the main figures in the contemporary movement that has produced no little genuine poetry.

The best of the new makers don't always agree. Thus Mr. Stephen Spender says that "writing poetry is one of the least revolutionary" of human activities. Mr. Charles Madge holds that "writing poetry is the most revolutionary" of human activities. Spender, Madge, W. H. Auden, Cecil Day Lewis are all bourgeois. Their readers are all bourgeois. They don't expect to have any influence on proletarians. Their own class is the only class that pays any cultivation. They deplore its "hopeless moral apathy," yet Spender admits that "the artist cannot renounce the bourgeois tradition" because the proletariat can offer no alternative. Mr. Madge, youngest of the four, wants action. Laissez-faire won't do for the poet. He and his reader must move in the moving world.

The imagination of Mr. Lewis, though he is an individualist, is stirred by "mass-disturbances." Yet he and the rest of them seem to be willing to surrender their individualism to the sway of the proletariat. Shelley said that liberty was a religion. They won't have religion; and theoretically they are prepared to give up liberty in its stricter sense. Fortunately, communism in England is not likely in their lifetime to dictate to them. One gets the impression that the London's article politics and fully aware of their dangers to artistry.

In their highest moments these so-called Communist poets have visions of the golden world. Madge is but building Blake's Jerusalem:

Joys that are past and secret now
Will wave and thunder on each bough
And all of life, a giant tree,
Will speak, in this green time to be.

Dictatorship, not of the proletariat, but of the Muses!—New York Times.

EXPERT SHORTHAND WRITERS

A feat in shorthand writing has been accomplished at Ottawa, which should draw attention to that art. There have been transcribed seven million words of evidence taken by the Price Spreads Commission, embodying nine thousand printed pages equal to a score of modern novels. Four expert shorthand reporters were engaged on this task, and the complete typewritten copy was ready each morning covering the evidence taken the previous day.

To be a competent writer capable of dealing with a job of this kind requires a wide knowledge of affairs in general and the capacity for keen concentration. To be able to take down in legible characters the words of witnesses as rapidly as they are spoken is an accomplishment that is worthy of some commendation.—Sarnia Canadian-Observer.

Private opinion is weak, but public opinion is most omnipotent.—Beecher.

FOREIGN TO EARTH'S FIELDS

If I should live full eighty active years
And spend my life in naming lovely things
I could not count the beauty that appears
Broadcast on Earth in rock and grass and wings.

The marvel of the seasons as they go,
Of stars and sea and painted, singing shells,
The intricate crystal of each flake of snow,
The colorful pattern of the hyacinth's bells.

When, then, comes this strange restlessness I know,
This search for something; what, I cannot say,
Which send me ever seeking to and fro
Through youth to age, through golden hours to gray?
Can it be this men hunger for from earth's fields
A beauty foreign to the fields of Earth?
—Aline Michaelis.

It was supposed that some wealthy man was backing Byrd but evidently the backer backed out. Now someone will have to dig down deep to pay the piper. Admiral Byrd will bring back much information about the ice fields of the far South but most of it will not be marketable in terms of money.

MORTALITY IN GERMAN SPIES is alarming and much boasted espionage system is becoming like the old gray mare, not what she used to be, according to reports from Berlin, which state that Herr Hitler views with alarm the fact that fifty-four goodlittle German spies in various countries picking up useful information on military matters, have lost their heads, in other words have been executed. This alarming mortality amongst the Intelligentsia has been the result, it is said, of the efforts of that Polish captain spy whose activities in Germany have thus far resulted in two women being beheaded and many others placed in prison, while his own liberty has been curtailed with a life sentence. The Polish captain managed to get a list of leading German military spies abroad, sent this information to the countries affected, and executions followed. Germany could do with a superspy like Captain George von Sosnowski, who was a devil among the damsels, and certainly found out most of the important military secrets of Germany through his lady friends, as well as curbing the activities of German spies in other countries.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS A WEEK was not sufficient to keep Rudy Vallee's wife in the style to which she preferred to become accustomed to and she sued the noted, radio singer and orchestra leader for a much larger amount. The couple had separated with Rudy agreeing to pay her, Fay Webb Vallee, one hundred dollars each week. Rudy got the court decision which applies all over the United States. And so, Fay Webb Vallee must try and live on one hundred dollars per week, and also pay her lawyer's fee which will not be small. If Fay lived any faster than one hundred dollars a week it would be hard to see her shadow for dust.—star dust, or gold dust.

PEOPLE DO CURIOUS THINGS, hard to understand. Take that young French army officer who wandered away up to the top of the world, land of the Aurora Borealis, where he started a trading post and later joined a tribe of Eskimos. He became their chief, taking the name Louvell Thomas wrote a book about. His real name was Louis Romanet, a restless spirit, who sought long for peace, only to find it in the igloo of an Eskimo. He learned the Eskimo language, adopted their customs, and became an expert hunter with harpoon, lance or rifle. During the World War he returned to France for duty, but when discharged returned at once to his beloved frozen north.

Every tramp who called was shown the pile and told to earn his meal. Out of fifteen callers three went to work. Two sawed a stick each and one carried until told to stop.

This morning about nine o'clock as the furniture conveyance belonging to Tickell and Rose was coming down Hotel street, the horses became broke. WIN PRIZES IN SCOUT CARNIVAL

Successful Event is Sponsored by Stirling Group

Stirling, Feb. 23.—On Wednesday evening, February 20, the Boy Scouts of Stirling scored another great hit when they presented a very successful ice carnival. Long hours before the appointed time, hundreds of people crowded into the Stirling ice palace, taking every available point of vantage. This event had been looked forward to with a great deal of interest, and to estimate the number of people in attendance would be rather difficult. Although the weather was cold, the crowd remained for the entire program, and a keen interest was shown in every event. At eight-thirty, a shimmering sheet of perfect ice reflected a sea of anxious faces lining both sides of the rink.

The judging committee then made its appearance amid the applause of the impatient spectators. Mr. Tom Ward, who acted in the capacity of master of ceremonies, called on Father Carroll, who gave a brief address of welcome, and declared the carnival open. Acting as judges, Rev. F. Joblin, Rev. J. A. Kofford and Father Farrell did splendid work in so ably performing a difficult duty.

After the band played the National Anthem, they broke into a lovely waltz tune, as some fourteen members of the Belleville Cruzite Skating Club glided gracefully to their places to participate in their first number. A waltz carried through by the Thiele in matchless rhythm and grame, received a great hand from the crowd. Trebs and solo exhibition of talented skaters were highly appreciated. The work of the two youngest members of the group, Miss Joan Parker of Belleville, and Master Flanigan of Frankford brought cheers from the crowd as they climaxed their individual acts in a dazzling spin.

The clowns were very clever and they originally caused a great deal of merriment, especially with the young folk. Mr. Jack Murphy thrilled the crowd with his speed skating and barrel jumping act. His receipted cheers as he bonafided his number by successfully hurdling seven barrels in one jump. The dancing acts and team work of the various groups were very gracefully executed and well timed. This, the main feature on the program, was brought to a close by a number entitled the entire company, and they left the ice amid cheers from the spectators.

With the beginning of the second intermission was lena, as the supporters of the various competitors cheered their favorite skater. The first race for public school boys was won by Malcolm Reid, with Orville Ashley a close second, and J. Parnsworth third.

In the girls' race Lenora Ward took a nasty spill as she led the field and Miss M. Richardson, Belleville, Olive Munroe second.

The senior race was won by Jack Potter with Frank Butler second and M. Reid third.

The boys' race from 8 to 12 years was won by Billie Magee with Charlie Jackson a close second.

The backward race provided plenty of thrills and was a close, Frank Butler getting first and Bill Morton second.

As this point the draw was made for the lucky ticket holder. Miss Irene Tucker of Harold was the winner. The prize was a trip to Toronto to see a hockey match or the equivalent in cash (fifteen dollars).

With this part of the program complete, the skaters were invited back to the ice. In less than a moment there was added to the gaily decorated building the glamour of beautifully costumed skaters of yesterday ago. Spanish cavaliers and señoritas, country gentlemen and farmers, sailors, dancers, hobos and clowns. To pick the winners in the various classes was a tremendous task.

Mr. and Mrs. Dionne and their family, and also Dr. Dafoe, were selected by a judge to be the Quints. The Old Dutch Twins and Popeye the sailor were present. Mr. Fred Rigby was the cowboy and Mr. Appearing as a Turk. Many prizes were awarded to the participating skaters. Miss Marion Jones as Pan in Rock took the prize for the best costume on the ice. Miss Gladys Joblin and Miss Thompson were the best dressed girls, Miss Winnie Ward and Miss Bray were skaters the prize for the best lady skaters. The prize for the most comic looking went to Ole Old Dutch girls, Miss McKeown and Miss Ferguson.

Mr. Philip Carr had an original costume. He wore a skirt made entirely of neckties.

To describe the scene as it appeared to the spectators would be impossible. The ice crowded all the evening and numerous prizes in addition to the ones listed previously ed were awarded. The Stirling Citizens' Band played the music. This was one of the most successful social events of the season and the various committees in charge deserve credit for the manner in which it was carried through. Without the slightest delay, each number was carefully planned and carried out.

Birthday Party.

A number of little playmates of Betty Hulin gathered at her home on Wednesday, February 20, for a party given in her honor on her ninth birthday. Until the girls were invited to sit down to a sumptuous supper, they took part in playing games and singing. The table was laden with many good things and some delicious cake in old rose and green. It was a very happy affair.

Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Nicholson attended a dance in the parish hall of the Anglican Church in Frankford on Thursday evening.

Mr. Gordon Dalley and Dr. Fedley were among those who journeyed to Peterboro on Wednesday evening to see the Peterboro - Campbellford hockey game.

Picton, Feb. 22.—Kiwanis members observed ladies' night at their regular meeting at the Globe Hotel on Tuesday evening. Twenty-five ladies were welcomed by President Phil Bowen. Dr. Semple of Belleville gave a splendid address on "Service Clubs and their Activities". Messrs. Fred Deacon, Archie Fox and J. W. Tallah of Belleville accompanied the Doctor and were guests of the club. Mrs. F. J. Webster was heard in a most appreciated vocal solo and the male quartette delighted with several selections. Altogether a very enjoyable evening was spent.

Mr. Will Redall of Hillier, chairman, and Mr. Charles F. Fraleigh of Bloomfield, secretary of Cheese Producers' co-operative, attended the recent meetings of patrons of the Cressey and Point Traverse Cheese Factories, and both of these factories decided unanimously in favor of becoming members, both of the Cheese Producers' Co-operative (Prince Edward), and the Cheese Factory Patrons' Association. Bloomfield and Cloverdale factories had made the same decision earlier. Other factories have not as yet been able to arrange patrons' meetings. The meeting of the advisory council, with a representative from each factory that was scheduled for Saturday, February 23, has therefore been postponed. It will be held instead in the board room of the Belleville Sewer Pipe Co., on Saturday, March 2, and if the crowd is very large will most instead in Bridge Hall. "Tragedy of a Mis-Directed Life" Discussed by Rev. R. R. Nicholson

Tweed—Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Kerr; Mrs. A. B. Allen, Mrs. J. W. Allen, Mrs. Ernest Allen motored to Toronto on Monday. Mrs. Allen attended the opening of the Legislature on Wednesday.

Mr. A. B. Allen motored to Toronto on Tuesday. Mrs. Allen returned by train with him.

While a car belonging to Mr. Harold Francis of Stirling was standing parked on South Victoria street on Sunday night, it was struck by a car driven by a young man from Hallowey. It appears that the driver of the automobile was meeting another car on the slope of the hill and did not observe the parked car owing to the glare of the headlights on the approaching car, and to the frosted condition of his own windshield. The standing car was not seriously damaged but the other was badly smashed up. Beyond a shaking up none of the occupants of the Hallowey car suffered any injuries, according to Provincial Const. Tweed is conducting an investigation.

"The Tragedy of a Misdirected Life—the poet Robert Burns" was the theme of a splendid discourse given by Rev. R. R. Nicholson at the United Church on Sunday night. Reading his remarks on Robert Burns' 176 "For the good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do," the speaker referred to Burns as a man of splendid impulses who was too weak to do the good that he wanted to do. He was a contradiction between the power he had and the life he lived. Burns, the peasant poet was looked upon as the Shakespeare of Scotland. He was a lover of nature, and an enemy of hypocrisy and insincerity. His poems breathed the spirit forty of the finest in the English language. Among these are numbered "To Banks and Braes of Bonnie Doon", "A Man's a Man for A' That", "The Cotter's Saturday Night", "To a Mouse" and many others. Burns was born two miles from Ayr in 1759. His father was poor but deeply religious. His son Robert often in his young manhood, caused him great anxiety as he recognized his son's weakness.

Robert received a good education and was noted as a brilliant conversationalist.

At the age of 19 he became the associate of smugglers and lawless men and it was these evil associations that ultimately caused his downfall. At the age of 25 his genius was recognized and it was between 1784 and 1786 that he wrote some of his finest poems. His first book of poems brought him twenty pounds. It included "The Cotter's Saturday Night" probably his best known and best loved poem. He next received in Edinburgh, later his second volume of poems was published bringing him five hundred pounds.

Trouble dogged was rapid and he lost his power as a writer. In July 1796 he died, at the early age of 37. In Burns flesh and spirit was sad interminable warfare from earliest manhood to the close of his life. Men Don't 'Approve of Glittering Fingers, Expert Says

By HELEN FOLLETT

If there is a man alive who approves of blood red nail glitter, he hasn't been round our neck of the woods. Many of them report that it fairly sickens them. Yet the dear-hearts continue to use it. Which goes to show that the sisters don't always aim to please the growly sex.

A certain percentage of woman have grown tired of it, have taken to lovely coral tints. Manufacturers of nail enamel offer their products in every shade of pink and red that can be imagined. They report that sales of vivid tints are falling off gradually.

Some of the gals who must be different or die are using amber, tea rose or bronze. They're not so bad. The trouble with bright red is that it takes away from the fairness and delicacy of the surface of the hand.

Do you know that when you walk you improve your complexion? It is true. Take deep, regular breaths, inhaling slowly, exhaling through the lips with a soft whistle.

This practice forces stale air from the lungs. It sets blood streams dancing. It warms the surface of the skin, helps it to function. It paints roses in the cheeks. Real ones.

When a gal is troubled with cold feet, moist hands and a rosy nose, it is high time for her to do something to rouse circulation.

One of the best means is to take a salt glow every morning. Moisten a cup of ordinary table salt, stand in the bathtub, rub the salt over the body surface. The little crystals act favorably upon the capillaries that are close to the skin.

Turn on the bath spray. Have it warm, chill gradually. Follow with a vigorous friction with a turkish towel.

Fashion Flashes

Mild days always give us a chance to wear something other than the old fur coat. Such an outfit consists of a bright red and black plaid velvet blouse, a black wool skirt and a youthful cape of black lapin or sealskin lined with the velvet of the blouse.

Elegance on parade is seen when women fare forth in winter clothes, much befurred. A lovely coat is in black wool, done on slim lines with a side closing. There is a huge swirl collar of fine mink that ripples into a jabot.

Seek a change when you are next in the market for a fur coat. Not in the higher price brackets, but very effective, is a coat of golden ermine with a huge swirl of cross fox. A lovely coat for those who like high shades in their frocks.

Dance gracefully in charming sandals made of bands of silver or gold sequins. The heel has bands of the sequins, and the ankle straps are also of the sequins.

Correct Manners

HOME WEDDING

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am to be married soon, in my home, and I wish you would kindly give me all the details as to how I should arrange for this home wedding....how we should enter the room, where I should stand, and everything you think I should know. Thank you very much for your help.

Bride-to-be.

For your house wedding you choose the most effective place in the living-room for the ceremony-place: before a mantel of a fireplace, or in a bow window, of between two windows. Have this place banked with greens or with greenery and flowers or with flowers alone. On the ends of this improvised background it is effective to have two tall items of decoration, tall floor candlesticks containing cathedral candles, or simple tall stands with trailing ivy or smilax, or very tall vases of beautiful white flowers.

Remove any heavy pieces of furniture to the sides of the room, but it is well to leave several chairs in position so that any older guests may sit, if they wish.

The wedding march may be played by a small orchestra or by a violin and piano, or by a piano alone, or the wedding march may be sung.

As the guests arrive, the bride's mother, the hostess of the occasion, stands at the door of the room in which the ceremony is to be performed, and receives the guests. The bride and her attendant and the groom and his attendant do not appear before they enter for the ceremony. This is true even in the most informal of weddings.

When the wedding party is ready, the bride's mother is notified and she takes her place in the part of the room reserved for the family of the bride, on the left of the ceremony place. On the right of this place stand the mother and father of the groom and the members of their immediate family. The friends of the bride stand on the left, and those of the groom stand on the right.

At the first notes of the wedding march or at some other signal, the clergyman enters the room and takes his place at the improvised altar, facing the assembled guests. Then the groom enters with his best man, and they take their places at the right of the ceremony place. The best man stands a step or two behind the groom, and on his left facing the entrance.

Next comes your maid of honor, walking alone. And last come and your father, walking together, you on your father's right.

When you and your father reach the ceremony-place, the groom steps forward to meet you, you stand on his left, and your father steps back a step or two to the left, where he waits until the place in the ceremony in which he gives you in marriage. Your maid of honor stands on your left, to help you with your flowers, during the ring part of the ceremony. The best man stands at the right of the groom to produce the ring at the proper time.

After the ceremony, the groom kisses the bride, the clergyman offers his "best wishes" to the bride and his "congratulations" to the groom. Then you and your husband turn to receive the greetings of your relatives and friends. In a house wedding there is no recessional.

Library Corner

"War Memoirs" of David Lloyd George, Volume Four. Iver Nicholson and Watson: London—712 pages.

An army of memoirs has been written about that disgraceful massacre which is more commonly known as "The Great War," but none would seem so startling or so momentous as these mammoth "War Memoirs" of David Lloyd George. He has made some alarming disclosures — disclosures doubtlessly, that are bound to have an important bearing on the moulding of Modern History.

Three volumes of his memoirs have been disturbing the peace for some time, and now he has finished his fourth instalment. This fourth volume should be of special interest to Canadians because it deals with the battles of 1917 in which the Canadian army played such a conspicuous part—Ypres, Passchendaele and Cambrai. And it is in his account of the Battle of Passchendaele that Lloyd George bitterly denounces the late Field Marshal Earl Haig. He holds him responsible for "the slaughter of 400,000 men." He writes:

"Whilst hundreds of thousands were being destroyed in the insane egotism at Passchendaele, every message or memorandum from Haig was full of these insistences on the importance of sending him more men to replace those he had sent to die in the mud....It was one of the blackest horrors in history....No general was expected to visit no-man's land until the battle-ground had been made safe for the brass hats."

This scathing accusation can be contrasted to the high tribute which the Duke of Kent paid to Sir Douglas Haig in his address at Edinburgh last Armistice Day. He eulogized Earl Haig as "a great soldier who received and kept the unswerving loyalty of his men." And, the Duke of Kent concluded: "in death his name is held in high regard." Apparently, however, "his name" is not "held in high regard" by David Lloyd George—not even "in death". For never, no doubt, has a more damning denunciation of one man been made by another. Lloyd George has scorned the sacred convention "speak no ill of the dead"—he has dared to damn the dead. And what he has said, colloquially speaking, is enough to make the late Earl Haig turn over in his grave.

The generals of the Great War, of course, have long been the favourite target for critics. They have been deplored and denounced fiercely for their lack of brains. Captain Liddell Hart, one of the most critical of these war critics if not the most capable, who wrote a "History of the Great War", protests strongly again at these so-called "brainless" generals in his latest book "The Ghost of Napoleon." And in that epic of the war written by H. M. Tomlinson, "All Our Yesterdays", a character called Langham laments:..every war is different from the one for which the experts prepare—the war the generals always get ready for is the previous war." Beverley Nichols also has dared to "Cry Havoc" about this. But few, if any, of these war writers have dared to direct their denunciations towards any one individual. They have not seen fit to make a personal attack on any one officer as David Lloyd George has done.

There will be some readers, therefore, who will be inclined to qestion the propriety of his remarks about Earl Haig and other British Military authorities. They will claim his indictment is vindictive-prompted by personal jealousy or revenge. They will feel that Lloyd George has been a little unjust; and they may say his remarks were uncalled for—that these things might better have been left unsaid. For granted that the generals did blunder, one opines that they were not wholly to blame. As H.M.Tomlinson wrote, the Great War was a different war—a new war—and the generals "did not know what to do....the whole library of military science and history was as obsolete by the end of the November of 1914 as the runes of witchcraft..and the head of the modern military genius was really as empty as Napoleon's old hat."

And so it may be argued that the generals could not combat with this new enemy—modern warfare. They were forced to be gamblers; then—victory or defeat depending on chance. And therefore, given an uncertain set of conditions and faced suddenly with a unexpected chain of circumstances, it was inevitable that they should be susceptible to errors. Lives were lost, true, but lives were also saved. And if these generals can be criticized for having lost lives, surely they should be praised for having saved lives also. Thus they would appear to be more the unfortunate victims of circumstance than the actual creators of conditions. And thus, to accuse a man of sending men to die in the mud would seem to be a rash statement. It is uncharacterisitic of the famous British fair play. It is not cricket to attack a man who is unable to defend himself "in death". And so, some readers may feel that David Lloyd George is not playing the game with the late Earl Haig.

Whatever the reader's opinion of Lloyd George's prejudices, however, he will agree that David Lloyd George is writing a good history of the Great War. And while it is an unofficial history it may be taken as official—for it is an inner history written by Great Britain's war-time minister. And it is only fitting that a man like Lloyd George who is continually making history should turn to writing it.

These volumes, therefore, written with disarming frankness and typical vigor, should prove indispensable to an authentic History of the Great War; and this fourth volume, particularly, as a history of Canada's part in it. It is decorated with some historic cartoons from "Punch", which lends a little comedy to the tragedy.-E.F.H.

DIONNES TO SEEK PARENTAL CONTROL OF QUINTUPLETS

Windsor, Ont., Feb. 22 (CP) — Paul Martin, Windsor lawyer, has been retained by Mr. and Mrs. Oliva Dionne in their effort to gain full parental control over their quintuplet daughters and to obtain a share of the money according from testimonials and newspapers, it was learned here today.

Mr. Martin, it is understood, will confer with Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn next Thursday, seeking the Ontario government's permission to use some of the money held in trust for their five baby daughters, for the support of their other children. The money, which it has been estimated will total around $100,000 by the time the babies are one year old, is to be held as a trust fund until they reach the age of 18.

But . . . is he crying for exercise?

HIS little cries go on and on . . . so pitiful! True—a baby must do some crying, just for exercise.

But when he cries too much you're right in suspecting that something is really wrong.

The trouble may be colic due to gas, acid stomach or that ailment which affects so many babies—constipation. Be ready for these difficulties.

Give the children's laxative

Give Castoria! It belongs in every nursery just as definitely as the delicate powder, the pure soap that guard a baby's petal-soft skin.

For Castoria is made especially for children. It is gentle and safe. Free from narcotics and harsh purgatives. It acts as an intestinal stimulant—not an irritant. It will not upset a baby's stomach or cause griping pain—as strong adult laxatives may do.

Ask your doctor about Castoria next time your baby has his regular health examination.

For every growing child

And remember . . . Castoria is the ideal laxative for older children too. Give it from babyhood to 11 years—for colic due to gas, diarrhea due to improper diet, sour stomach, flatulence and constipation. And as a first aid when a cold threatens.

Children take Castoria willingly. They like its pleasant taste.

Buy the family-size carton. It's more economical.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

SHE'S FIVE YEARS OLDER

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been going with a young man who is five yers younger than I am, and he would like to marry me, but I can't make up my mind, owing to this difference in our ages. I love him dearly and I know he loves me, and I would much appreciate your honest opinion on this question.

M.E.P.

I wish you had told me how old you are, as I would be better able to advise you. If you're in the early twenties and the boy is not legally of age, my advice would be to wait. If your young man is 24 or 25, and your tastes are congenial, and he is employed, I think such a marriage would be a safe risk.

Disraeli was considerably younger than his wife, and they were conspicuously happy. The same is true of Marian Evans, who wrote under the name of George Eliot. Her second marriage to Mr. Cross was ideal. Similarity of tastes, more than years, is the thing which counts in marriage.

Didn't Answer His Proposal Because She Couldn't Read It

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I've been away from my girl, in a distant city, for about a year, and I've been writing to her regularly at least once a week. She writes back to me, but very seldom writes about anything I told her in my letters. During the last six months I have asked her three times if she will marry me, and she has never replied.

At last I went to see her and demanded to know why she ignored my proposals of marriage. She told me that not even a handwriting expert could make out my letters, and that instead of getting mad and bawling her out, I ought to practice writing until it could be done.

I was so mad with her, I left her house without another word. But I've been thinking it over ever since. Maybe she's right. I ought to be a better penman. What do you think of the sample of my writing I am sending you? I want to get this girl back. How shall I do it?

Ambrose C.J.

As long as you insist upon an opinion, my dear boy, here goes. Your handwriting is pretty bad. It took twelve minutes for me to make out your letter, and now I'm not quite sure about some of the words.

Take your girl's advice and try to become a better penman. Learn to write on the typewriter, and ask her to take you back. I think she will.

And while we are on this subject of handwriting, I wonder why some of the young people who write to this column don't try to write more plainly. Their handwriting has every evidence of haste, and sometimes they write so faintly in pencil that it's impossible to make their letters out. A well-written letter is the best letter of introduction.

If you're dissatisfied with your handwriting, send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope and I will give you the name of a good handwriting manual.

How Can She Find Happiness In Life.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

When I was 19 years old I fell in love with a man of 28. For four years we really cared deeply for each other, and my parents tried to rush me into marrying him. This made me balk, and I hesitated, also, because I thought of marriage as drudgery, so I refused him.

Today my life is nothing but misery, as he married another girl for spite, and I am not satisfied anywhere or in anyone else's society. I think and dream of him by day and night. I cherish our happy days together, and cry over their memories with blinding tears.

Maggie.

You seem to belong to that vast sisterhood, my dear Maggie, who never realizes how much they love until their lovers marry someone else. For four years you had your chance to marry this young man, but refused, so he married another girl. Now there is nothing to be done about that except to dry your eyes and let this mistake be a lesson to you.

You are young enough to make contacts and forget the old love in a new one, and this time do please be sensible. Don't refuse to marry because your parents would like to see you happily settled and because marriage means housework. It's lots of fun to keep house for someone you love.

assistance." The entire crew was taken off and landed at a fishing village with the exception of the captain and a wireless operator, who remained aboard when it was decided the ship was in no immediate danger.

One Leaks Badly.

The Catherine Radcliffe, which was owned by the Clarens Radcliffe S.S.Co., was described as leaking badly.

No cities were found during the night to the identity of the planes reported lost near the Island of Sable, 150 miles south of St. Thomas. Fears that it might have been a Pan-American air liner bearing James Roosevelt, eldest son of the president, proved groundless. the Roosevelt ship landed safely at St. Johns for the night.

A dispatch from St. Thomas, in the Virgin Islands, suggested the possibility the identity of the plane reported lost near the Island of Sable, 150 miles south of St. Thomas. Fears that it might have been a Pan-American air liner bearing James Roosevelt, eldest son of the president, proved groundless. the Roosevelt ship landed safely at St. Johns for the night.

The 1,744-ton Oltingo, a British steamer, became the fourth victim of the storm in the Bay of Biscay when its steering gear broke. The last report was it was rounding outrockets which had been sighted by the French steamer tug Abeille No. 22. The British naval sloop Pathan also was going to its aid.

Meanwhile the tug Seaflake forged toward the Caterina Madre, which lost its propeller in the northwest tip of Spain and the S. S. Ilona, a Swedish vessel, continued its journey with the rescued crew of the Thale. The Juvenal, which picked it had lost a man overboard yesterday, reported no further trouble.

Assumed Boat Sank.

Shipping men assumed the Thale had gone to the bottom. It was an Italian freighter, as are the Caterina Madre and Oltingo.

Inside Tokyo Bay, the American freighter Elisabeth Kellogg remained aground, but her crew had been cleared of the suspicion that they had deliberately grounded the vessel to spy on Japanese fortresses. Both the Elisabeth Kellogg and the grounded British vessel are under charter to the Japanese Mitsui Company.

A boat which put out in the teeth of a 45-mile wind was reported to have saved three men from the oyster sloop, Sargent of Bowers Beach. Coast guard craft put out from both the Delaware and New Jersey sides of Delaware Bay in a race to the scene.

"Strange Wives"

An Exciting Romance of a Man Who Married a Whole Family!

Einstein's theory of relativity is variety of rules. In the fifteen simple, compared to the ones addressed in the hilarious comedy drama, "Strange Wives," which opens an engagement at the Capitol Theatre next Monday.

Roger Pryor, appearing in the male lead of the picture, has his own theory when it comes to relatives, inasmuch as he is head on all sides with his wife's kinfolk in the story.

It is the most amusing tale of domestic discord ever told, written by Edith Wharton, noted novelist and is expertly played by a cast that includes Helen Chaworth, in the female lead, Esther Ralston, Hugh O'Connell, Ralph Forbes, Cesar Romero, Francis L. Sullivan, Valeria Hobson, Phyllis Brooks, Leslie Fenton, Tom Dugan and many others.

Pryor appears in the role of a young American business man who marries a temperamental Russian girl who has a flock of relatives. Before long they all move in on Pryor and he has to support them. The turning point in the story comes when Pryor rebels and puts his foot down. But instead of solving matters it only complicates them more than ever. Pryor's wife, worth, at Pryor's wife, resents his attitude toward her "flesh and blood" and refuses to help him them. She accepts the attentions of another man, and, of course, Infuriates Pryor. The ending is a highly exciting and unexpected one. Director Richard Boleslawski has turned out a satirical comedy of these complications that everyone will relish. The colorful background supplied by the Russian relatives is picturesqueness. Especially interesting is the translation in the lives of several of the characters when they come to this country, leaving all their old traditions and leisure wealth behind them. Some of them are forced to accept menial jobs over here, but their dignity remains unimpaired. One of the most amusing incidents in the picture concerns a former Russian general makes a living driving a taxicab in Manhattan. All eyes are upon him. He is about to be arrested for speeding when it is discovered he is only a doorman of the cafe.

"Strange Wives," is a real, human and pulsating drama, temperamental and dramatic, comedy and situations every married man and woman will easily recognize.

"Several Excellent Shorts"

Several excellent short featurettes are shown in conjunction with the above feature, among them is the hilarious comedy "Super Stupid", starring Vince Barnett. A beautiful scenic in color entitled "Paradise of the Pacific", plus a single reel, comedy "Pardon My Scotch" completes the bill and in conclusion a very amusing cartoon "Cannibal Capers" and Song".

Barry Dinnerware will be given away on Monday's and Tuesday's only. Shows at 2.30, 7.15, 9.15. Last Show Tuesday.

"Oh! O' My Dreams"

Featuring Mary Ellis and Allen Jenkins, two prominent juvenile stars and "The Gay Desperado" a smart romantic comedy with unusually interesting and compelling and while imaginative carries with it a strong message to the public in favor of peace and the outlawing of war.

AT THE REGENT

"The Count of Chalmrau"

Reveals Will Rogers In His Happiest Role

Will Rogers has played an amazing variety of roles. In the fifteen talking pictures he has made to date, the star has been an oil millionaire, a mild-western farmer, a hobo, a meat packer, a druggist, a Kentucky judge and many other things.

But until now Will has never enacted the role for which he is perhaps the best fitted of all—a politician. In real life he is one of the best-informed and keenest students of politics in the entire country, but until he made "The County Chairman" which will begin a three-day engagement at the Belle Theatre today, he had never had an opportunity to transfer such a character to the screen. "The County Chairman," produced by Fox Films, is a screen adaptation of the famous stage comedy by Frank Ade, which once served Macklyn Arbuckle as his best vehicle on the stage. It tells a spirited, shrewd and dramatic story of small-town politics in a day when American village life was far more colorful and isolated than it is today.

Will, it is said, is seen in a role superbly suited to his talents—that of a fire-eating boss who owns the town, but who gives more than he gets. Surrounding the star is a small-town, war-horse, with plenty of big time talent.

In his cast she star has the support of many well-known players who have appeared with him in earlier successes. Louise Dresser, who has been seen with Rogers in five pictures, has an important role and Rochelle Hudson, Ned Taylor, the young lovers of "David Harum," have the leading roles in the romantic assignment. Other featured players are Berton Churchill, Minor Watson and Sterling Fetchit.

Rogers is seen as Colonel Ellis in "The County Chairman," it's Will Rogers' favorite, in his favorite role.

Excellent Shorts

"Three Cheers for Love" is the title of another of those popular all-star comedies to be presented on the screen of the Regent in the latest New's of the World, and your favorite, Ted Healy and His Band in the latest caper "Two Gun Mickey."

"Swing Out All Others"

An all-star cast with the speed and sparkle of "Top Hat Man" is that in the cards for the tremendous ovation being given "Smoking Aces" when it comes to the Regent for the first time, coming to the Belle Wednesday for three days.

WHEN MAN O'WAR WAS RACING KING, WON FIRST IN 20 OF 21 STARTS

Back in 1919 and 1920 the race horse of the era was Man of War, known as the Horse of the Century. racers ever to carry a jockey, Man o' War son of Fair Play and Mahubah, was one of the track's biggest money winners, and was practically unbeatable. In 1919, at the age of 2, he made 10 starts, taking nine first places and one second. In the following year he won all of his 11 races. For the two years he took 20 firsts of 21 o' War won easily.

races, winning a total of $240,465, the wonder horse was purchased as a yearling in 1918 at an auction for $5,000 by Samuel D. Riddle, prominent horseman. Man o' War ran a match race against Sir Barton, Triple Crown winner, in 1920 which set a record for wagering in Canada. A. M. Orpen, Toronto promoter, put up $75,000 and a gold cup for the race and the money handled in the mutuels was just under one million dollars. Man o' War.

WATCH YOUR STEP

We are anxious to co-operate with the Ontario Government in the matter of Accident Prevention. The year 1934 witnessed approximately 500 people killed and 10,000 injured by Automobiles, many crippled for life—in this Province. Most accidents occur between 5 and 11 p.m. and drivers around 20 to 25 years of age are most frequently involved. Please drive carefully, especially on ice. Allow the other fellow plenty of room. Carry Auto Insurance, but above all—place your insurance with us.

TORONTO MINES CLOSE

Toronto, Feb. 23.—(CP)—The Toronto Mining Exchange list had its strong and weak spots in the closing session of the week and trade was on a much reduced scale. God's Lake and Siscoe supplied most business. A few penny stocks continued active, including McWatters, Canadian Malartic, Granada, McMillan and Base Metals Corporation.

Lake Shore had a fair turnover at $4.80 showing a gain of 25 cents. Bralorne held unchanged, Hollinger gained 35 cents and Teck Hughes gained 5 cents.

Siscoe gave a demonstration of strength, selling actively around $2.60 for a gain of about 10 cents. Reports of improved ore conditions were current. Sylvanite, while slow, was up 5 cents and Buffalo-Ankerite was off 5 cents.

Base Metals Corporation touched a new low at 40 while Noranda firmed 25 cents.

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, Feb. 23.—(CP)—The Industrial section of the Toronto Exchange indulged in a mild sell-off to wind up the week, though offerings were in no case in heavy volume. Losses were general over the board but did not exceed a half point among the active shares. Distillery Utility, Oil and Food shares were all in the next group of recessions.

Walkers common sold down 1 1-2 to 29 and Distillers Seagrams at 10 3-4 was down a point. Industrial Alcohol A at 8 3-4 was off 1-4. The Brewery shares had minor losses for Canada Malting and Brewing Corporation common. Nickel, C.P.R., Ford A and the Oils, including Imperial and McColl went lower by 1-8 to 3-8 each. Bell Telephone was offered down 1 1-2 to 131 1-2.

Dominion Stores was down 5-8.

WALL STREET FINANCIAL
(By Victor Eubank)
(Associated Press Financial Writer)

New York, Feb. 23.—(AP)—The Stock Market sides were overcome today. Many improved tendencies exhibited by the recently battered Utilities. The Rails, Steel and scattered Industrials pointed downward. A few specialties advanced on small transfers. The close was a bit heavy. The turnover approximated 370,000 shares.

Commodities, Bonds and Foreign Exchanges were mixed. U. S. Government Securities were in demand at higher levels, but secondary Corporation Loans were in supply. Leading Gold currencies turned up and the Pound sagged.

In the Canadian section of the list, aside from heaviness in Dominion Stores, fractional declines occurred in McIntyre and Canadian Pacific. Dome and International Nickel were resistant. On the curb Hiram Walker dipped more than a point but Lake Shore remained steady. Dominion Government Bonds were narrow. Canadian Funds were unchanged at 100.00 cents.

Shares off around 2 points each included U. S. Steel Common and Preferred, Bethlehem, Johns-Manville, Dominion Stores, Baldwin Locomotive Preferred, U. S. Smelting American Locomotive and Santa Fe. Among others, down a point or so were National Biscuit, American Rolling Mill, Deere, and Du Pont. A gain of 5 points was registered by American Crystal Sugar on a few transfers and Consolidated Gas, North American and American Waterworks were up fractionally.

DOMINION STORES FIFTEENTH YEAR

Net Profit of $18,151.99 Reported at Annual Meeting

Dominion Stores, Limited, closed its fifteenth fiscal year on Dec. 29, 1934, with a net profit of $18,151.99 and a current position somewhat better than the preceding year, it was disclosed in the annual report mailed to stockholders.

Total quick assets of $3,296,635.46 are 4.5 times total current liabilities of $730,255.17 as compared with a corresponding figure of 3.7 times. Cash on hand and in banks, call loans and guaranteed investment certificates total $1,186,396.03.

Accounts receivable, consisting largely of amounts owing by various municipalities for relief, total $320,421.50, a reduction of $95,007.27 from the previous year. Total fixed assets show a slight reduction to $1,228,923.34 due to the sale of some property and the expropriation of other property for street widening purposes.

The profit and loss surplus account appears at $749,509.68 as compared with $1,077,276.56 at the close of 1933. This reduction is attributed to the payment of $320,707.55 in dividends in excess of the net profits for the year. The Company had previously declared that future dividends would be paid semi-annually instead of quarterly and would be paid only out of current earnings.

Morley Smith, President of the system, attributed the unsatisfactory earnings largely to three conditions, lack of general improvement in Eastern Canada, competition to maintain volume and the methods of presentation of evidence before the price spreads commission. On this latter point he said that officers and directors of Dominion Stores would welcome any constructive recommendations which the commission might make.

The report emphasized the important part played by Dominion Stores in the economic life of the country. It is the largest grocery chain in the Dominion with 496 retail outlets at the close of the fiscal year. It is one of the larger employers of Canadian labor with a weekly payroll in excess of $40,000, Mr. Smith said, and is one of the largest buyers of Canadian food products in the world. Last year, he revealed, considerably more than $10,000,000 worth of Canadian farm products were purchased by the company.

"We believe that a company such as yours with a strong liquid position and with no bank loans or capital indebtedness other than is represented by its common shares, can face the immediate future with confidence," the president declared.

VERMILYEA CASE DEFENCE RESTS

more of a mental search of accused and had consisted of a probe into Vermilyea's earlier business life. The history had been traced thru his trip from Western Canada to California, a questioning of employers and general business. The different position, 8 or 9 of them, were pointed out as having been held by the accused.

Liking for Job

Mr. Payne dwelt upon the occupation as a seller of fruit. "He appeared to like this job the best, that it let him get out and get around. He had held this until 1931 or 1932, I think," witness continued. "Then business, he told me, had become bad; he lost his job and tried to get work. He spoke of no income and no visible income and of the trouble of keeping his children in college."

"Just continue, please," invited Mr. Payne.

Reference to Assistance

"He spoke of his mother being well off and the rest of the family and that they didn't need financial assistance, but he (accused) needed help to carry on. He spoke of the division of the estate and that he thought it should be divided up among the four of them." So he wrote his mother, he told me, putting this proposition up to her.

Then he told me of his sister writing him, protesting against this and said that there was a "conspiracy" against him.

Justice Jeffrey pointed out that this letter spoken of was not the one in reference to the division of the estate. "I made a mistake there," agreed witness.

Spoke of 'Conspiracy'

Mr. Payne continued his examination in regard to the letters. "Did he tell you of the results of his request to his mother regarding the division?" A—Yes, he said she did not agree with him. Then, he said, he began to realize that there was a "conspiracy"—that they were conspiring against him. He said at this point that he thought he would go crazy, it preyed on his mind so much.

Then, he again said after this refusal, he worried—didn't know how he and the children could live. He said he began then to formulate a plan to rectify this conspiracy."

"Proceed," said Mr. Payne.

"Then I Came East"

"He said he had to raise money. He added then I came east and you know what I did."

Q.—As the result of your examination and relying upon your long knowledge of accused, did you arrive at any finding regarding the sanity of the accused?

Acts of 'Crazy Man'

Dr. Robertson pointed out various acts of the commission of the crime as being those of "a crazy man." I most assuredly believe he was an insane man. He did not know the act was wrong and doesn't know it was today. He believes he was prompted by divine guidance. He said he knew he was right—he stuck to "this point" and I could not change him."

Witness later said the word "divine right" or guidance had not been used by Vermilyea in this respect, that he (Dr. Robertson) had deducted this from his experience of mental cases.

Dr. Robertson at this point called attention to the difficulty of classifying any patient into any class of mental cases.

Believes "Able To Scheme".

"This man, in my opinion, is of the paranoid type. This type is able to scheme and plan acutely; they are considered to be extra smart, but their reasoning power is wrong. This man is not of the lower type of paresis—he is of the scheming type."

It was further added that accused did not suffer from fixed delusions.

"Explosions" Says Doctor.

Mr. Payne referred to a newspaper allegedly procured by accused on the morning of October 5 at the Walker House, Toronto.

"Did he know then that he had done wrong? A. This man, as I say does not believe he did wrong. I might add that this "explosion" having passed off, left him in a quiescent state, but when he saw this newspaper he might have believed he should have gotten away, but still he did not believe he was wrong.

Question of Erasing.

Mr. Payne continued.

Q. When the man went to this Los Angeles Gladys Avenue garage, in the evidence of the owner, he (owner) was requested to erase the records on the blotter—in your opinion, did the accused at that time know at the time that he was wrong? A. I said several times that accused didn't know then, and doesn't now, that he was wrong. I believe he thought, in his own way, this was one way of covering up his tracks.

Dr. Robertson supplied that accused had told him he (accused) had been thinking over "this plan" for weeks.

Classification of Types.

Mr. Payne referred to antecedents of the family on the maternal side and attempted to have the doctor classify the types of mental deficiency as regards certain members. Dr. Robertson pointed out that heredity was an important role in insanity. "It might hit one place and miss another." Harold Vermilyea, taking into consideration his depressive condition recently that if an individual of his type to under a strain would be much more liable to crack than if he had come out of ordinary good family stock, said the doctor.

Mr. Urquhart, in taking the witness, brought the statement that he (witness) "did not pretend to be a mental specialist".

Q. You told us that as far as this spinal arthritis was concerned, accused had been told by a doctor who was treating accused for it. A. Yes.

Disease Ruled Out.

Q. You can, as the result of the hospital examination, rule syphilis out of this case? A. I was satisfied that he had no syphilitic lesions.—I mean disease.

Mr. Urquhart referred to letters allegedly written by the accused.

Q. You spoke of these and he remembered what was in them? A. Yes.

Q. He remembered the letter sent by his sister? A. Yes.

Q. You know there are two rules prescribed by the Criminal Code with regard to criminals being responsible for crime? A. I understand there are. . . .

Mr. Urquhart read from the rules and then asked if Vermilyea did the deed and when he struck his mother with the axe, he would know he might kill her. The doctor's answer was, "Yes, I believe so."

Q. Would he think this an act for which he was liable to arrest? A. I believe I would say he might know this was punishable, but that he was justified in so doing.

"When he committed this act if he did, his mind was in such a state he did not appreciate law, order or anything else," added witness.

Take 5 Vermilyea Y 1

Q—Then why did he leave the scene on the run?

Defence objected and was sustained. Mr. Urquhart reframed it "he left hurriedly then."

Says Plan Conceived

A—I believe he was merely following a paranoid plan.

Q—Then every move he made was planned even as to how he would escape? A—I believe that is quite possible. Paranoids have very cute plans sometimes.

Witness could not directly state if the plan had been made in advance, but "it had been conceived before he left California."

Mr. Urquhart referred to delusions. "He said he had these — that his aunt and sister were "conspiring" against him. You spoke of this? A—Just repeat that.

Q—You say he said he was under this delusion? A—He used the word 'conspiracy'. Q - Was this a fact? A— No, there was no conspiracy. Q—The sister, we know positively had written this letter protesting against giving him this money? A—But that is not conspiracy; just advice.

Delusion And Act

Col. Greer instantly objected as a question "not for this witness to answer."

Mr. Urquhart was asked to reframe the question.

The prisoner would not profit by killing the sister. He would not get any money—there would be no financial benefit?

Q—Or his aunt? A—No.

Q.—Then —I suppose it is not unnatural for a person to be depressed especially with conditions as they are at present. A—We all feel it more or less.

Letters Produced

Questioning then brought the statement from witness that accused had told him "he had thought this over for weeks and weeks".

Mr. Urquhart referred witness to a man's leaving the scene on the night "hurriedly". Q—He realized the nature of the act? "The physical nature of the act", pointed out defence counsel.

A close bond of relationship always existed between mothers and their first-born child, and this was often used by them to skin their mothers out of large sums of money. Dr. Robertson said in answer to a question.

At this point morning recess was called.

Defence Rests Case

Defence Counsel at eleven o'clock, this morning with the examining of the last witness rested its case.

Dr. Mitchell in Rebuttal

With the resumption of court after the recess, Dr. W. B. Mitchell, Montreal, called by Crown Prosecutor Urquhart, next witness, testified that he had made psychiatry a special study since 1917 when he graduated from Toronto University. He was a director of the Mental Hygiene Institute of Montreal and is Professor of Mental Hygiene at McGill University, Montreal.

Witness had examined accused on October 28, 1934, last autumn. It had been held at Belleville and was a purely mental examination. It occupied five hours, divided into two periods of the day. He had heard all evidence of the case, except for Tuesday morning when he was ill.

Q.—In your examination did this include a statement of his history. A.—Yes.

Doctor Sees No Mental Disease

Q.—Have you formed—you are familiar with the definition of—having regard to all this are you of the opinion that at the time of the alleged offence, was he suffering from a condition of the mind?

A.—It is my opinion that at the time he was not suffering of a disease of the mind.

Says Nature of Act Known

Q.—Would the accused at the time of the act know of the nature of the offence, and would he know he was wrong? A.—Yes.

Q.—In your opinion at the time of the reported commission of the act, was he laboring under a delusion which might, in his opinion, excuse him? A.—He was not, in my opinion, suffering from any delusion which might excuse him from the act.

Defence objected to this question and was sustained by the court.

"We are not getting up a specific delusion," pointed out defence.

Repeats Accused Not Insane

Dr. Mitchell pointed out again that in his opinion if he committed the act the accused was not insane at the time the crime had been committed. The examination (personal), his case history, his antecedents and other sources revealed this, he said. "The patient's appearance, speech, actions, moods or variations of moods, his ability to calculate, reason, his insight, all . . . . .

There are three major things one looks for in insanity; there are three reactions. The first is organic trouble—the central symptom here is a loss—intelectual deterioration. I found none here. The second in insanity is a toxic reaction type. The central element here is confusion—there is a clouding of the patient's consciousness. Here I found that his orientation—as to time, place and person — was very good. There was nothing to suggest confusion.

Pathologic Reaction

The third reaction is the psychopathologic type. This third reaction type is of the depressive group, the dementia praecox type. This type possesses hallucinations. I found no evidence of intellectual deterioration, that he was suffering from delusions. His conversation was collected, coherent and there were no evidences of disturbance in his train of thought. There was, however, just a slight impediment of speech.

Q—You heard the evidence of Dr. Howland and Dr. Robertson—that he was of the paranoid type—what do you say?

A—I would say there was nothing from my examination to suggest this.

Questioned on Reflexes

Col. Greer took the witness.

Q—What was the importance of making reflex examinations? A—Where there is definite pathological knowledge this would be valuable as a test. Witness took no reflex test.

Q—This field was left unexplored? A—Yes.

Not so much attention had been paid by him, witness said, to the examination of the Vermilyea family tree. When he had arrived at his first tentative conclusion of Vermilyea he had known of suicides and insanity of relations.

Heredity and Mind

Q.—"As a psychiatrist what is your opinion of heredity in regard to mental disease?"

A.—Certain authorities are agreed that insanity is not hereditary, but certain trends may be transmitted.

Q.—It is not possible is it to predict when transmission of these trends will strike any definite generation? A.—No, one cannot.

Witness did not agree with statement that mothers transmitted mental disease altogether but said the fathers were sometimes responsible.

Q.—Would you accept the disclosures that there was evidence of insanity in certain members of this family? A.—I do.

Col. Greer referred to a bulky text book on psychiatry.

Characteristics in this respect to heredity were being more fully explored only during the past few years, Dr. Mitchell pointed out.

Q.—May the jury take it, that with a recorded condition in the family stock, it would be more prone to transmission. A.—Yes.

Suicide Causes

In answer to statement that suicides were a form of insanity witness said that fear of disgrace, worry over financial troubles were times responsible.

There must be some great perturbed state of mind for suicides to take their lives. I agree with that.

Suicides occur in times of pathological depression—they are in a confused or panic state.

Q.—What kind of mental abnormality leads these suicides to the act? A.—They do it not always when they are insane.

Time of Suicides

Col. Greer sought acquiescence that the four relatives had been under great stress when they committed suicide. This was agreed with.

"But," witness continued, "people do commit suicide and now knowing it." They had yielded all the responsibilities of this life when they (relatives) committed the act.

Agreement As To Mentality.

Q. Do you agree that it was a mental condition which drove them to it? A. Yes.

Defence pointed out that seven members of the family were mentally unbalanced.

Witness stated in answer to a question that the form of mental disease suffered by Vermilyea made some sixty years ago when he was confined to a room, was called insanity at that time.

"Charles Vermilyea at the age of sixty became childish," continued defence.

Q. This would be an early age for his uncle to become childish? A. I don't know what the physical facts were. The simple statement that he became childish tells nothing.

Q. Is this an early age to become childish? A. No.

Childishness.

Q. If you did have childishness at this age in any family would it be an indication of weakness in the stock? A. No.

Q. When did you ever see anyone childish at 60 in your experience? A. Right along — all the time. There is no set age; they might become so at 50.

This state is a progressive state of mental deterioration or degeneration, it was pointed out.

Agrees Insanity in Stock.

Defence hammered at the question regarding sanity in the stock. Witness agreed that "there was insanity in the stock."

This was described by defence as "a cloud hanging over the family from which lightning may strike at any time."

Heredity Only One Factor.

Witness explained: "The inheritive factor is only one factor. This has in the past been somewhat over-stressed. Knowing the history and having a patient under our care, we can do much to help him."

Q. Inheritance does cover a substantial field in the field of intelligence? A. Yes.

Witness agreed also that the patient would have little control over this. Frequent passages from a book on psychiatry were used by defence counsel Greer. Not all points were agreed on by the quiet spoken expert. Not all psychiatrists think alike, he explained and opinions are apt to be changed on study.

Dementia Praecox.

Dementia praecox was described as a "mild withdrawal from the outside world", the patient living in a fanciful state. They are quite distinct as a class. Paranoiacs are of the dementia praecox type, he amplified, up to a certain point.

Q. Does . . . ? I turn to Sullivan—you know him? A. Yes.

The defence took up a second book of psychiatry. The author, Sullivan, was known by the expert on the stand.

Relative's History.

Reference was made to Gerald Vermilyea who went insane. He was described as a dementia praecox type, but was also believed to be a manic — depressive type.

Dr. Mitchell gave a lengthy and detailed medical outline of this type. He concluded with the statement that often it was difficult to classify a patient until a later diagnosis can be obtained.

The dementia praecox paranoiac type harbored delusions of persecution. This is a constant factor in the type. This would be accompanied by other marked traits — apathy — absurd notions and so on. The statement that hallucinations were held by this patient was not a correct one, the witness pointed out. In paranoia the intellectual facilities often were unimpaired, suggested defence counsel. This was agreed with by witness.

Paranoiacs and Plan.

A. The crimes of the paranoid are not always impulsive? A. Yes.

Q. You quite expect them to have a plan even? A. Yes.

Text Examined

A volume on psychiatry was handed witness by Col. Greer and perused carefully for several minutes. Patiently and methodically, Col. Greer plodded through paragraph of the book, defining cases cited by the author. Witness agreed on the majority of the technical questions.

Col. Greer referred to the examination of accused. Witness said a five minute preliminary chat had first been held and then accused asked him, who he was. "Then we talked frankly. He invited me to make a physical examination, and I told him I had hoped that I could but I did not do this."

Report on Case

A report had then been made by witness to the government of the mental examination.

Q—Did you report— I mean did you make up your mind he was mentally affected? A—On November 7, I wrote a tentative report and then on November 12, I made a complete one.

Col. Greer had secured a copy of the report through the permission of witness.

No Physical Examination

Q— You didn't completely make up your mind until you had examined further records of X-ray pictures and other things? A—No. Witness added he had made no physical examination because he believed that he had not been authorized. He did not wish to do this without the consent of accused's attorney.

Although he had made no medical examination he said he had arrived at certain conclusions which have been modified or confirmed since then.

Sanity Field

Defence counsel pressed the point that "the sanity field had not been exhausted by the witness's examination of accused." Dr. Mitchell in answer pointed out that there was nothing to indicate "grave mental disease."

Q. You did say in the report that he was not in a normal, mental condition of health. Did you make up your mind at the time of your report that he was?

A. The time I made———.

Witness was halted by Col. Greer. Finally he answered the question by saying the man, from the examination, showed he was not a mentally normal man.

Egotistical in Type

"This report was made upon the basis of my own discussion with him. He was described to me as always being impetuous, impulsive and easily disturbed by other people. Part of this knowledge came from him and part from the brothers. I found him to be of the egotistical, assertive type, with an impediment in his speech. He also appeared in an abnormal emotional state. He was an unusually emotional person.

Heredity and Mind

Q. Admitting he had heredity (insanity) in his family stock, and this emotional condition you spoke of, would you have any basis for the belief this was taking over?

A. I would have no reason to say this.

Egotism is one of the most important characteristics of the paranoid, defence sought to establish.

"It might be applied," witness agreed.

Mr. Urquhart took up the questioning. He paid reference to an aunt committing suicide during menopause. "This happens often?" A. It is common—men, added witness, also undergo a change in later years of their life, but the condition is not as marked as in a woman at "change of life."

Court was adjourned at one o'clock as the witness was allowed to sit down. Court was to resume at 2.15 p.m. Saturday.

DRESSED POULTRY QUITE PLENTIFUL

Eggs up Slightly in Price But Little Change Elsewhere

There were but few changes to note in prices which prevailed on Saturday's market, which was well attended by both producers and buyers. The interior of the market building was a busy place. Eggs showed a slight increase in price owing to the fact that the supply was not as large as usual on the weekly market. Home cooking was a feature with many purchasers procuring the dainty morsels. Dressed poultry was plentiful with chickens predominating retailing at remunerative prices. In vegetables and grains no change whatever was noted.

Parliament Hill Hears

(By WILFRID EGGLESTON)

Colin Campbell, recently elected member for Frontenac-Addington, successor to the loveable old family physician, Dr. William Spankie, is the first Liberal to represent that constituency since the beginning of Union days, when he came.

This cane—an Irish blackthorn stick—was brought from the Old Sod by one of the Harpell family, and was duly presented by the handed over to the first Liberal who should be so successful as to win the riding.

It had to wait a good many years. But in due course, on the 26th of September, 1934, the cane was qualified for by the Colin Campbell aforesaid, mining engineer and Queen's graduate of 1911.

The Harpell of the present generation decided that the presentation of the historic cane should be made with appropriate ceremony. So this day he finished his sheep, changed from overalls to frock coat and silk topper, and set sail for Campbell's office.

To the amazement of the rival council candidate, Harpell arrived there in due course, but with nothing in disarray, and the historic cane in pieces, held together with adhesive tape of some sort.

The explanation was soon forthcoming. En route to Campbell's office, his legal supporter had met the chief lieutenant for the defeated candidate. The latter made merry at the frock coat and silk hat, and asked where Harpell was going.

"To Colin Campbell, ye spalpeen ....." he words to that effect.

At this the Conservative henchman expressed graphically what he thought of the successful candidate and the irate Harpell, forgetting the antiquity and sacred dedication of the blackthorn brought it down on the other fellow's head.

Colin, under the circumstances, feels, he says, none the less affection for the historic blackthorn because of the mishap it suffered.

When Colonel Herb Lennox passed away, the House lost not only a brilliant and amiable member, but one of the three members who habitually wore his fedora—or some other headgear—in the House of Commons. With "Herb" it was usually a brown felt with a gay ribbon. However, the gap was filled again by the election of "Tommy" Church, who sports a mysterious fedora, which quite overshadows Dr. Manion-Wells's tweed cap or the headgear of the member for Hochelaga, on the other side of the House.

They tell a kindly anecdote of Tommy Church, which dates back to the heady days of 1928-36. The government had, most days, an unenviable majority of one, the opposition was manoeuvring for a spill. Pairs were taken by the order of the chief whips. Members thus couldn't get away from Ottawa without arranging their party for possible defeat. If Liberals, or a lost opportunity of victory, if Conservatives. The atmosphere was tense.

In the midst of this the wife of a Liberal member fell desperately ill. He was called to her bedside. He notified the whip, who was adamant. To go meant the downfall of the party and a general election. The poor member faced a great dilemma.

At this juncture the information came to Tommy Church's ears. He lost no time in telling the Liberal member to rush away to his wife's bedside. "I'll be your pair, whip or no whips," said the redoubtable Tommy, placing humanity before party, and the offer was gratefully accepted.

When the newspapermen were down at the mint to inspect the first fruitlets of the new Silver Dollar, the Master of the Mint graciously permitted his guests to pass around among themselves gold ingots, in order that they might examine them thoroughly, feel their weight, and so forth. The reporters stood with the proper air of reverence around a truck on which were laid 50 of these gold blocks, each about the size of a firebrick..... If there was an disposition to slip one of them into any reportorial pocket, it would immediately disappear when the ingot was handled. Each of them weighed 26 pounds, each was worth at current quotations $14,000..... The truck had much less than one layer of the bricks on it, but the value of the gold on it was nearly three-quarters of a million dollars. The Mint refines nearly 180 of these bricks every week, worth about two million dollars..... no gold coins have been minted for years..... large quantities of metal lie around in various forms, molten silver spills on the floor, and so forth, but none of it disappears..... the Mint's profit on the balance to the nickel every night, so we were told.

Those who knew Sir Wilfrid Laurier never found his impressive grace and dignity. At a meeting of the editors' guild of the Provincial Institute recently, A. C. Campbell, veteran newsman and editor of Hansard in past years, told the following yarn:

At one of the campaign meetings of a candidate who had been a member several times but only by the slightest of margins, Sir Wilfrid Laurier was scheduled to speak. He arrived late, walked down the aisle in his usual collected manner, mounted the platform, and nonchalantly removed his overcoat.

The official candidate leaned across to a friend and said:

"If I could only take my overcoat like that, it would be worth my vote!"

From my notebook..... Colin Campbell was brought up in the same village as Duncan McArthur, former professor of history at Queen's, now deputy minister of education for Ontario..... the village is Dutton, near St. Thomas..... Norman Rogers, nominated recently for candidate at Kingston in the forthcoming elections, was private secretary to Mackenzie King when the latter was prime minister..... Senator Dan Riley was once judge of an Indian parade at High River and gave the award to the "best dressed Indian" to a redskin who had practically nothing on—just the allimportant suit of loin cloth..... his sense of humor appealed to the other contestants, who, in spite of being pissed over after sending several hundred dollars and much care on their costumes, applauded the award vociferously..... the Speaker, Hon. J. L. Bowman, mastered French sufficiently rapidly that one week after he had been unexpectedly appointed to the post, he began to give prayers in that language at the opening the House..... the rule in Canada is that prayers one day are in English and the next day in French.

COL. PRICE ASKS ABOUT BEER SALE

Toronto, Feb. 23 (CP)—After what was for most of them a new experience—sitting in the provincial legislature for the first time—Ontario legislators were able to return to their home today for the week-end preparatory to the hard grind expected to start Monday.

Half an hour sufficed for yesterday's sitting. It was featured by a brief discussion of administration of the liquor control act between Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn and Col. W. H. Price (Cons., Toronto-Parkdale).

When the session resumes Monday afternoon the government will be confronted with a list of 22 Opposition questions placed on the order paper yesterday. They involve inquiries regarding dismissals of civil servants, salaries of deputy ministers and various other topics.

The throne speech debate will start Tuesday afternoon, when Geo. S. Henry, leader of the opposition, and the premier will speak.

Discussion on beer sale in the province took place yesterday for the first time this session when Col. Price read a newspaper clipping about A. L. O'Connor, Alberta Hotel proprietor, as charging "outlaw" vendors and obtaining beer cheaper and selling it at a lower price than he could.

Mr. Hepburn had not read the despatch in question but promised to turn the information over to provincial police with instructions to correct the situation.

"It needs to be corrected — all through the province," Mr. Price answered.

The premier introduced a motion of thanks to President Franklin D. Roosevelt and the United States Congress for the return to Ontario of the mace taken from the old Upper Canada Parliament Building when United States soldiers raided Fort York in 1813.

HOUSE PASSES NUMEROUS ITEMS

Eight Hour Day Bill With Day of Rest, Read Once

Ottawa, Feb. 23 (CP)—In an amiable mood the House of Commons pushed through a long list of assorted items of business as the parliamentary week ended yesterday. Railways' refunding loans, national health, pensions, election law, 8-hour day legislation and a bill to provide for a weekly day of rest in industry were some of the topics covered.

Hon. D. W. Sutherland, Minister of Pensions and National Health, had the satisfaction of putting a large slice of his estimates through the Committee of Supply. The House voted him some $11,200,000 to carry on the work of his department. This covered all health estimates and the salaries and expenses of the Canadian Pensions Commission.

Health estimates raised the question of state medicine, and in answer to a plea for action in this direction from Dr. J. F. Bowden (Lib. Ste. Scholastique) Dr. Sutherland showed the impossibility of gradual progress. He emphasized the necessity of carrying the medical profession's approval of any move and of preserving the personal element in medical treatment. If all doctors were suddenly made employees of the state the efficacy of medical aid might be impaired because frequently the success of treatment depended on the human side of the relations between doctor and patient more than on scientific knowledge.

A bill to appoint the firm of Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth, Guillfoyle and Nash auditors of the Canadian National Railways in place of George A. Touche and Company received second reading despite vigorous objection from Hon. W. D. Euler (Lib. Waterloo North) and Hon. W. Gray (Lib. Lambton West.) The two Liberals feared some dark purpose lay behind government's move, but Hon. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals, assured the House the only object was a change to bring in a few new ideas. He said many large businesses found it wise to change auditors from time to time.

FINIS TO CAREER

DON YOUNG

One of the most brilliant careers in intercollegiate sport was brought to a close when Don Young, McGill University athletic star, announced his retirement from sport after McGill met Queen's University at Kingston in a regular intercollegiate basketball game. Young starred in both football and the cage game. He was captain of McGill's football team from 1931 to 1933 inclusive. He was all-eastern flying wing in pros allstar lineup of 1933 and holder of the same position in intercollegiate allstars of 1932 and 1934. Before entering McGill he was a member of Ottawa Rough Riders, who took Canadian football honors in 1928 and 1927. In 1935 he played with Ottawa Rideaus when they won the Dominion basketball crown. With McGill he was on five intercollegiate championship teams; the football squad of 1930 which won the honors; and basketball squads of 1931 to 1934, inclusive. He is due to graduate in medicine this spring.

READ Before You BUY!

Omar the Tentmaker knew...

OMAR certainly knew the value of publicity—wherever his poetry was quoted, people spoke of his tents. Probably they were good tents—they might have been the best procurable—it is also quite likely that people from far-off villages came to buy from him, but—it was eight hundred years before all the world knew of him and his famous pre-prohibition slogan, "A loaf of bread, a jug of—." (pardon us). Eight hundred years after he died, we are all convinced that Omar made tents—not only that, but we have heard so much about them we are convinced they must have been GOOD tents. Were they obtainable today we would probably buy one. However, poor Omar has been gone nearly nine centuries.

SCHOOL TEAM IN SECOND PLACE IN TRENTON LOOP

Defeats Airport 5-2 in Smart, Fast Game

OVERTIME TUSSLE

Brighton Scores Two Quick Goals in Overtime For Win

Trenton, February 23.—(Special) If the weather continues like the present, the Trenton and District Hockey League will be entering the finals in another week. Wednesday night the High School went into the second position after defeating the Airport team by 5-2. The league leaders, Albion squad, were bowled to the tail-end Co-Operative Workers who forced the leaders into overtime before winning an 8-6 verdict.

The scholars scored one to the opening period off the sticks of Mitchell and Cain. York scored for the Tigers after a scramble when Mitchell fell into the net and came out with a cut nose. Jim Kerr shot a similar from the blue line that beat Richardson when it landed in the top of the prime. Cain made it 4-1 after he took Kerr's pass after he beat the defence. Wilson and Moore showed the most speed for the Tigers and their combinations with Barlow let them in several times but they could not beat the lanky Gray in the goalmind's net. Dadswell scored for the school in the frame with Reid getting a Tiger tally from a scramble in front of the net.

Stars are hard to pick on the High School sextette as every man plays his part to perfection. Richardson is the main stay of the Tigers with Moore, Barlow and Wilson doing the best of the forward duty.

TORONTO 'VARSITY SENIORS ARE STRONG CAGE THREAT

Waisther or not they are good enough to win the Dominion basketball championship now resting on their laurels is yet to be seen, but University of Toronto senior cage squad, unbeaten this season, is fighting colorful aggregation. Coached by Lew Hayman, who also drills Toronto Argonauts' football team in the fall, they have produced a snappy brand of basketball, which means up well in that sport's quick crack American squads. At left is an action shot of the team clowning a rush up the floor with a crowded leap for the loose ball. Lower right, Normie Newman regular guard, taking a low pass. Top inset, Hughie Marks, smart, aggressive forward and, lower inset, Joe Goodkey, crack scoring ace of the Blue quintet, and one of the most elusive and dangerous men in the Canadian game.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

Unless something unforseen happens the second semi-final games in the Ri-Y city hockey league playdowns will start next Monday night, light on Monday night when Belleville carry a one goal lead against the S.E.A.C. kids while Grills Garage enjoy the same advantage over Jim Day's Trenton aggregation. Judging from the brand of hockey dished up on Thursday we can see no reason why anything at all, so evenly matched are the clubs concerned. Percy Rollins apparently guessed right when he allowed the weaker teams to strengthen up slightly, as all four teams seem to be on a par now. A goody could left the arena well satisfied with the brand of hockey dished up by the city leaguers on Thursday night and doubtless to any they'll all be back with increased numbers for the return game on Monday.

Secretary Joe Shortt of the local Ki-Y League announced yesterday that four teams had signified their willingness to participate in a junior series in the Ri-Y loop, now, that the other groups have completed their schedules and the winners have been declared. The league is to compose the junior series will be O.S.D. Juniors, Black Hawks, Red Wings and Maple Leafs. (Seems like a miniature N.H.L. set-up.) The accomplishments of the Ri-Y loop have been wardly visible by the number of players who have graduated from that organization into faster company in local hockey circles. Nearly every senior player on the city circuit, today, got his primary hockey schooling in the Ri-Y League, a well worth while organization that is doing a beautiful end-to-end rush. Coughlin made the pound defenceman for the Workers did the same to the net. Field 6-6. Chester McKinnon replaced Cummings in the Brighton net in the last stanza and he kept the Workers from scoring while his teammates went to work and tied the peatime and win after 10 minutes overtime.

Instructor Ralph Morden of the local Y.M.C.A. is contemplating an indoor swimming meet with a view to decide the city aquatic championships. Last year a few successful inter-city indoor swimming meets were held at the Albert College with marked success. Should the Y.M.C.A. project come on a larger scale, these meets this spring will be local swimmers interested in such a meet should get into immediate communication with Mr. Morden. There is a just one day way to stage local city meets first and then have the championships clash in inter-city trials later in the spring. Indoor swimming is a thrilling sport and would attract a big crowd following, once it was properly established in Belleville. At any rate the layout has been completed and announcements as to the dates set for trials will soon be forthcoming. Pickering is as well as swimming races will be included on the program, it is believed.

Although there was no interscholastic hockey played in the Bay of Quinte group in C.O.S.S.A. competition this winter, Lester Shiels' B.C.I. puckchasers were awarded the group title by default, Napanee, Trenton and Picton deciding that the local collegiate would prove too strong for competition in interscholastic hockey circles. The B.C.I. squad has headed together the other evening and beat the O.S.D. seniors by the score of 3 to 1 in an exhibition game that was played wholly to accommodate Coach Shiels in mustering a team for the C.O.S.S.A. play-downs, usually the local collegiate packsters' crew awarded their group championship by default they will come on to the C.O.S.S.A. play-downs and they will be scheduled to meet Tweed High School, winners of the Trent Valley group. The Tweed students have a sturdy aggregation of seasoned players, as the majority of the scholars at the Tweed line-up played for Stan Curry's wonderful junior O.H.A. squad. No dates have been set as yet but a couple of days though Coach Shiels was asked if he would consider playing the first game in Tweed on Monday night with the return game to be played in Belleville at a later date, goals to count on the round. No definite arrangements have been considered, however. In years past some real good interscholastic hockey series have been staged at the local arena and drew more than the usual amount of public attention. With O.H.A. hockey out and the city league finals on, the next in line will be interscholastic hockey for the fans.

The annual spring volleyball league is being talked over at the Y.M.C.A. rooms, as a couple of empty boths left, so local volleyball fans will better move along if they want to get in. They're incidentally volleyball is a great combination, especially for the busy business man.

Tulsa's hockey arena, home of the American Association Oilers, cost nearly $1,000,000 and seats only a scant 5,000, which is quite a loice surface which means there are lots of ringside seats at high prices for boxing shows. The arena also boasts a $50,000 pipe organ.

Last year the local branch of the Y.M.C.A. sponsored a monster one-night bowling tournament with marked success. The project is being revived this year with next Thursday night set as the time. Not only good prizes awarded the winners but the event is a just one and deserves the support of all citizens.

Jay Parris' Campbellford Maroons ran amiss last night and a beaten set out by Eddie Wright's Peterboro Intermediates, when the latter staged a hectic last period finish to win by a 6 to 1 score, giving the Pets the round by the score of 6 to 5. Apparently the long lay-off experienced by the Maroons did no way assisted their cause. The Petes now continue in the O.H.A. play-downs

PETES WIN ROUND

Campbellford, Ont., Feb. 23 (CP)—Peterborough defeated Campbellford last night by 4 to 1 in the final game of the O.H.A. intermediate "A" series, winning the group honors 6-5. Callacline was outstanding for the Petes getting three counters while Gardiner snagged the other. Fred Ingram scored the only goal for the locals.

BOSTON PAIR WIN AWARD

Reign of Mrs. Samuel and Brother "Bud" Wilson is Broken

Montreal, Feb. 23 (CP)—Complete Canadian domination of the North American figure skating championships today was at an end after six long years of victories by Mrs. Constance Wilson Samuel and her brother, Montgomery Wilson, of the Toronto Skating Club, and the four of the Minto Skating Club of Ottawa.

The dent in the Canadian string of victories was made last night before a crowd of 5,000 by Miss Marbel Vinson and George F. B. Hill, of the Skating Club of Boston, who triumphed in the pairs' championships.

Mrs. Samuel, however, successfully defended her ladies' singles title with Miss Vinson, the United States singles champion, second. In the men's singles, "Bud" Wilson was still too much of the master for diminutive Robin Lee, 15-year-old American titleholder from New York.

While the orchestra pounded out throbbing Viennese waltzes Miss Vinson and George Hill gave a superb exhibition in winning the pairs' title. Miss Vinson and Hill are United States champions, went through an exacting repertoire with spirit and grace.

The Minto Club's fanning quartette of Miss Prudence Holbrook, Miss Edna Davis, Melville Rogers and Guy Irwin, proved equally to the busy from the Skating Club, Inc., of New York.

CAMPBELL RINK WINS TANKARD

Defeat The Lumb Rink of Kingston 14-10 For Trophy

Toronto, Feb. 23 (CP)—Ontario's standard bearers for the third consecutive year in the Macdonald Brier Trophy bonspiel, the youthful Campbell rink from the Hamilton Thistle Club, today looked forward to taking the cup and bringing the Canadian curling title to Ontario for the first time.

Gordon Campbell skipped his quartette to victory yesterday over Fred Lumb's Kingston four, 14-10, in a game featured by the strong comeback of the fighting Limestone City crew after being eight points down after four ends. Lumb counted four and two of the next two ends to force Skipper Gordon Campbell made four points on the following two.

The Kingston rink took three of the last four ends but only scored one on each. Both won six ends and Campbell's ability to count more than one point on his winning ends accounted for the victory.

The Burden trophy, consolation of the bonspiel, went to A. Lockhart's Kitchener crew, which trounced an Agincourt four led by D. C. Thompson, 21-6.

Dave Walker's Port William rink won the grand aggregate honors by taking two semi-final matches, in the Royal York and Birks-Ellis-Eaton competitions, after they won the Royal York in 1929 and 1931. Joe Goodkey's crack scoring ace of the Blue Bus quintet, and one of the most elusive and dangerous men in the Canadian game.

Latest recruit to pro hockey ranks is Hector "Toe" Blake, crack centre of Hamilton Tigers in the O.H.A. Blake signed a contract with them season with Montreal Maroons. Blake has been a big help to the Tigers in their drive which they hope to clinch by an Aulan Cup victory.

TORONTO'S PLAY TWO ON WEEKEND

Toronto Leafs, Chicago Black Hawks and Montreal Maroons, some of the teams better able to stand it, take over the heavy duties in the National Hockey League schedule this week-end, playing games today, Sunday and Monday.

After a disastrous start on their last western trip for the season Tommy Gorman's Maroons continue tonight with a game in St. Louis before they leave the States behind. They'll be back in Chicago for a Sunday evening engagement.

Beaten Tuesday in Montreal by Detroit and again by Toronto's runaway and tumble act, Detroit, Marcon hope for a respite from the heavy going they've had since the season opened and have been bad medicine for a lot of the strongest teams there.

After playing Leafs in Toronto, the Black Hawks jump to Chicago for a game tonight, are mated with Boston for second place in the American division figure on piling up big off enough points in the two games to keep Napanee on their heels.

Leafs travel to Detroit for their second week-end game, meeting a Red Wing team that doesn't seem to know when it's beaten.

Montreal Canadiens, coming from St. Louis Thursday, Americans hope for a better result in tonight's battle with Canadiens in Montreal but the Habitants are also smarting under their first defeat at home.

Top dogs in the American division are Boston with a two-point lead on Bruins and Black Hawks, New York Rangers play their only game of the week-end in New York tomorrow night against Bruins. It is just possible Ching Johnson, their big defenceman who has been out of the game with a leg injury, will be able to make an appearance.

TWEED JUNIORS EASILY BEATEN

Napanee Kids Far Too Smart From Goal to Centre

Tweed, Feb. 23 (Special)— With an eight goal margin to work on Napanee coasted along to win the group finals in a junior O.H.A. fixture at Tweed on Thursday. The score of 9 to 4 gives Napanee a total of 20 goals to 7 on the round. The winners on the game fully deserved their win as they presented a smart organization from the goal out to the last sub. Their Deseronio front line of Tympkins and Jackson brothers deserves the lion's share of the credit for the win, as they accounted for eight of their team's nine goals. The second line of Derow, Evans and Leary, while they worked hard were not of the same calibre as the first string. Reeves in goal for Tweed earned brackets in defeat as he stopped 'shots' which had goal writers all over them time and time again, when Tweed threw every man up in an endeavour to cut down the overwhelming margin of their opponents' lead left him absolutely unprotected. The game was marked by smart combination work by both teams, the visitors having decided margin only in the final frame, as Stan Curry's puppets realized they were labouring in a lost cause. To the credit of the latter they fought hard to the end and skated themselves into exhaustion. The referee on the other hand forcing Tweed to carry the play to them in the first two periods, had considerable to say in power left to wind up the third period. Four minutes were added.

From the moment "Bouncer" Holway of Bellevile dropped the puck to open the first period the players went into the game with a determination to give everything they had, and, although they lost, the large crowd of spectators had plenty to enthuse over before the final gong sounded. Elsbury tested Curry with the first shot, which this smart goalie easily turned aside H. Leal drew a penalty for tripping Murphy, but although Napanee pressed hard no damage was done before play returned. Jackson saved beautifully when Murphy was through with only the goalie to beat. H. Leal scored the first goal in four minutes to arouse the crowd to excitement. Then Richardson tripped Maguire, who was right through, and Tweed turned on the pressure but Napanee shot the puck up the ice to relieve the situation. Reeves stopped three shots in quick succession from close in, when Deseronio scored Napanee's second. Several scrambles occurred in front of Napanee net but it was not until near the end of the period that Tummon who played stellar hockey all through the game, beat Reeves. Tumkins got this one back in the first minute of the second period for throwing his stick when Maguire was through and Tumkins drew a penalty. Napanee kept off for being the sixth man on the ice. Tweed's power play proved ragged the puck to good purpose and Tweed failed to score as the period closed.

Leary was still in the penalty box when the second period opened and Tweed pressed hard but Tumkins and Maguire cleared. Maguire and Tummon tested Curry but could not score. The play continued in midfield for a time until Richardson Gerow broke away, passed to Leary who beat Elsbury for Napanee's third goal to tie up the game. Tummon and Murphy drew penalties as the period closed.

Turn on Pressure

Sensing that their opponents were laggin Napanee turned on the pressure and were rewarded with three quick goals in a row. Jackons inside of four minutes in the third period. W. Leal added Napanee's fourth after Reeves had made four more to bring their total to nine for the game. Tummon, the boy Leals, Elsbury and Richardson were best for the locals while Murphy, Curry and Richardson were the pick of the visitors in addition to Curry, Tweed's goalie and Jackons.

The largest crowd of the season turned out to see the game, considering the weather, from Napanee. The locals playing their first season in O.H.A. hockey did remarkably well to get into the group finals and credit is due to Stan Curry and his assistants for him to support entering a team in the O.H.A. series. Napanee will have the time. Maguire and Reeves alone will have passed the age limit when Napanee next starts around, as the other boys still have several years before them of action.

Referee "Bouncer" Holway of Bellevile handled the game to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Napanee—Curry goal; Richardson, and Murphy defence; Jackons, centre; W. Jackson and Tompkins, wings; Deseronio, Subs.

Tweed—Reeves, goal; Tummon and H. Leal defence; Maguire, centre; Alexander and Courneyea, wings; Derow, Leal, Lurfman, Elsbury and Arber.

STRATEGIST AND MASTER DESIGNER

The test of true courage is to know fully the danger to be encountered and to deliberately undertake that situation nevertheless.

No one knows better than Commodore Gar Wood, "the Gray Fox", the perils to be encountered when he goes across America to against the world's fleetest, watercraft. Every time he enters a race he is betting his life on his own skill and judgment as a designer and builder.

When engineers and designers of power craft get their heads, their grim verdict was that the craft was overpowered and wouldn't last the gruelling 800 miles throttle. Gar Wood checked his calculations again, gathered up his two reddy-bear mascots, and went out to break another world's record. Here's the fact: He had miscalculated even one-eighth of an inch in design, the colossal engine would have right. He bet on his own judgment and scored a belief.

Gar Wood's win at an average speed of 74.915 miles per hour, and even hopes to achieve 80 miles per hour says Dodo said recently that no such speed will be attained by power boats for 50 years to come. The next Harmsworth race should give the answer. Whether 200 miles an hour is achieved or not, followers of the racing career of this veteran know that when the aluminum-bodied hull of Miss America X with her Packard power plant, equal to that of two locomotives, thunders 'round the course, if skill and courage is what is required, the new world's record will be hung up.

FAITH ATTRACTS A COURT

CHAPTER TWELVE

It was Faith's first evening at sea.

She leaned on the rail of the upper deck as the stern of the ship, starring at the strange glisten of water under the stars, the smooth roll and fold of white tumbled waves. She watched with melancholy the ribbed wake of the huge ship, churned to pale green and cream, leaving Hunter Barclay farther an farther behind, a dim enshrouded figure vanished from her life. The feel of sea and sky was ceaseless, endless. Faith could fix her mind on no tangible object.

"Hello Madame, of what are you dreaming?"

The caressing foreign voice drew her around with a winging movement of flight.

"I have frightened you. I beg your pardon, Madame." The tall blond man bowed with a military dike of heels, a military set to shoulders moulded in a dinner coat. "You seemed lonely."

"I am," Faith said impulsively. "I was. I shall have a darkey. If you didn't expect anything, He didn't care, she thought sadly, and the cold echo returned to her heart.

The next morning although she looked particularly pretty in a green jersey sport suit, and was obviously lonely in her steamer chair, the Count of whom she didn't even know her. Not that she really minded. She didn't, she guess. She saw him through the portholes of the smoking room sitting at cocktails with a small group of envious people. Decolor in his light flannels, he was a noticeable figure in the room of women in summer clothes.

Later, as she was with this same woman, he bowed to Faith politely, a little absently as he accompanied the burning, fixed Faith with a brief stare of the keenest variety.

Then she knew it was the most amazing man always belonged to attracting the. These people he was with might be; probably were friends of Hunter's. They seemed to carry their privacy about with them, aclike as if they were invisible to the common eye. They gave, dinner parties, played bridge, and were all reserved tables in the smoking room or on the deck terrace, invisions to other passengers.

What would they do if they knew that the charming Faith Barclay on the passenger list was Hunter Barclay's wife! One name bore no privilege, the other was open sesame. There was a suggestion of unfairness in the thought that, on even terms with the Barclays, Hunter would probably win de Marbot away from the lady in earnings. It would be interesting to watch Hunter, Faith told herself grimly.

She felt mildly interested in strangers She was too proud to join the more accessible groups that were forming with easy poise, philosophy of shipboard. Sports on deck, in the promenade; cards and drinks in the smoking room; deck telegrams and books exchanged by steamchair neighbors. She didn't seem to loved, life was full of terrifyingly sweet things crowding her. She wondered if Hunter would ever think of her; when she would see him again. She wondered, knowing him, if he was like in clearly as he had stood that last morning in her cabin, "You're very sweet," he had whispered. And then he had told her she must not forget him. But he had kissed her —such a light cool touch of her lips.

Faith slept on the couch in the studio where she could look out at the stars. Sometimes, waking at 2 it could be the same sky they hung over the Barclay home.

The next morning, he went out alone. It was an adventure, like Alice in the wonderland Faith Herald Tribune two blocks down. Faith felt very much alone, surrounded by the foreign life of the old streets, the unusual cries of the streets, a man leading goats whose tails he sold, little maid servants in stiff aprons and caps, a boy with a pole chocked old woman selling roses and violets from a cart.

"Hunter Barclay married to Mystery Girl", was the headline of a short cabled notice in the middle of the page.

HUNTER ARRIVES IN PARIS

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

When Faith tumbled back into the friendly shelter of the studio, Mary Allan looked up from her work. Before story, Faith kept nothing back.

The brief announcement of Hunter Barclay's marriage to a mystery girl, by on the boat the night before, where Faith had flung herself. Allan's black face was now shrewd to the headlines as she stroked Faith's feverish head, her cool fingers still smoothing the girl's soft bright hair.

"I don't know how it got out," Faith moaned. "But he'll blame me."

"It wasn't your fault, dear," Allan Allan comforted. "And don't worry, they won't worry Hunter Barclay's wife up to that poor girl's death. Maybe—they're even glad you came wrong." She picked up the paper, looked at him intently. "They don't know anything. Mr. Barclay couldn't be reached at his apartment. Anyone" she added practically, "there's nothing you can do about it."

There was indeed nothing to do, Faith knew. Until Hunter was communicated with him—if he ever did, wherever the leakage came from—in Paris, she would from Mr. Mc-Kee who married them, or the newspaper men—this publicity was the last thing Hunter had bargained for, and it would create havoc in his life.

Mary Allan refused to be responsible for the lies that Hunter's chivalry had turned against him in boomerang. She folded that Faith go with her that afternoon to the Guaranty Trust to find out whether her first week's allowance of two thousand dollars had been deposited.

An alleged quadrangle was disclosed in testimony by Mrs. June Sibelle Emerson, Denver socialite, in combatting a divorce plea of her husband, Walter W. Emerson, screen writer-actor, in Los Angeles court. Both are shown in above photo. From the witness stand, Mrs. Emerson admitted an affair with Baron Raoul Sewell, handsome yachtsman, but charged that her husband sanctioned it. She testified a "trade of wives" whereby she allegedly passed the night with Mrs. Sewell while she was with Sewell. Mrs. Emerson asserted that all of her meetings had the sanction of Emerson and that he once agreed to give her a divorce. Emerson denied all the allegations, and Mrs. Sewell added her denial to his.

As a result of the deal's failure, several banking and speculating firms were forced into bankruptcy. The effects of the deal were felt on both sides of the Atlantic and in Africa.

They succeeded in quelling the fire but only at a cost of disabling the vessel and a rope from the British fishing boat Guardian, was a welcome sight to the sore-pressed crew. SIR JOHN SIMON GOES TO GERMANY

Will Discuss All Points to Consolidate European Peace

By GEORGE HAMBLETON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Feb. 25—(CP Cable)—The German Government today formally invited Sir John Simon, Foreign Secretary, to visit Berlin to discuss all points raised in the Anglo-French communique of Feb. 3. which envisaged a wide-spreading series of pacts to consolidate European peace.

The invitation was promptly accepted and Sir John will leave for Berlin shortly. No decision has yet been reached as to whether he shall also go to Moscow and Warsaw.

The Berlin conversations will therefore cover not merely the proposed Aerial Locarno but the Rome pacts on the independence of Austria. The proposed Eastern European pacts, the return of Germany to the League of Nations, abrogation of the disarmament clauses of the Treaty of Versailles and conclusion of a new general arms limitation convention.

Germany's original reply to the Anglo-French Communique left some doubt whether she was willing to talk about anything except the air agreement. She accepted the Air Locarno as the basis for discussion but scarcely mentioned the rest of the proposals.

Vermilyea Jury Retires At Four O'Clock Today To Consider Verdict

Justice Jeffrey Sums up Case in Over Two Hour Address

EVERY POINT REVIEWED

Trial is One of The Longest Ever Held in This County

Promptly at 2.15 this afternoon the jury resumed their seats. Mr. Justice Jeffrey immediately resumed the bench. In moving a small lamp to one side to get a clearer view of the attentive jurors he addressed them:

"Gentlemen of the jury, I suppose you are glad to see this trial concluded. No matter how long it takes it is fitting and proper that every opportunity should be given the accused. The Crown case has been fairly and admirably presented, to the defence it must be some satisfaction to know that it has been carried on so capably.

Accused Has Benefit

"The accused in law is presumed to be innocent of the charge of murdering his mother until the Crown has proven that he is guilty; until it is clear in your mind that he is guilty he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. The burden to satisfy this doubt remains to be removed by the Crown.

"You are not bound to follow my opinion in this; you are entitled to follow your own opinion. You may only take the law from me. The law may be severe and harsh but with that you are not concerned.

Not Necessary to Show Motive

"Can there be any doubt in your minds that Mrs. Vermilyea came to her death as the result of an assault and are you satisfied that whoever assaulted her was responsible for her death. It is not necessary for the Crown to show motive. The Crown has said that he would profit by her death. It has been well established that he might benefit by a division of one-quarter of the estate.

Evidence Fresh

"Let us go back over some of the that in 1932 accused was in need of fresh in your minds. There has been ample evidence presented, and that 1932 accused was in need of money. A letter had been sent the mother. This letter was shown the daughter and an answer in protest was made. Then the $5,000 at that time was not paid over, but shortly after it was. In January, I think, of 1933, and in the early part of the spring of 1934, he wrote again for more, suggesting a division of the estate among the four of the family. At the same time he endeavoured to interest his two brothers in what he had done. I think we can assume this was refused. Later we can assume when the request for $1,000 was refused, this pictures pretty well the accused was in need of money.

"Taking the evidence from California we can assume he was pretty hard up. During the summer, the mother still apparently refusing to give him any money, he brooded over this. There were the letters written his mother showing the need existed not only for himself but for her grandchildren.

Spoke of Parked Car

On September 25 he parked his car in a Los Angeles garage. The car was not taken out until October 6. Swayne, the caretaker, says he was employed by the accused, his duties being to look after the house and boy. Do you accept the evidence of Swayne? If you do, then you will accept as evidence this letter of instructions. He gave the addresses of relatives and told Swayne if any message came he (Swayne) was to wire upstate.

Probably Part of Plan

The instructions were perhaps given for the purpose of proving that he was upstate at the time. Was this part of the plan?"

Justice Jeffrey referred to the accused being identified as the man registering under an assumed name at the Walker House. "Was this to hide his identity? On the same day he made arrangements with a taxi driver to drive him to Trenton. Do you believe Bannas and the clerk at the hotel? Do you believe that Bannas (taxi man) when he says the accused was his fare? You have Bannas driving to Trenton, eating a meal with him, is he liable to forget this man?

Bannas' Evidence Reviewed

"After the meal, Bannas said they proceeded to Belleville. The name of the street was unknown but it was in close proximity to the home of Dr. Faulkner and Mrs. Farley.

The maid at the latter place told you he asked if Mrs. Vermilyea was in. He returns in an hour, when he did the same maid answered the door. The maid swears, that the man who came to that door was the accused, the son of Mrs. Vermilyea.

Do you believe her?

Visit is Recalled

The mother returns and he goes through the doctor's office door. The maid showed the man to the hall and library and his "Aunt Lizzie," as he called her, was asked about. The man did not see his mother that night because when he was to be taken in, he hurried out. He goes back to the car, drives back to Toronto. On Tuesday he goes, if he does go, he goes in and buys a hatchet at Simpson's. It has been proven, that Mrs. Vermilyea was killed with an uncommon type hatchet. Did this salesman Nicol sell this to accused—there was no positive identification by him, except in the line up, among 12 men at the police station, a man "resembling" accused

Other taxi drivers have identified the accused as a man who dickered with them for trips. One taxi man was positive of the accused being the one, who had treated him badly, when he booked him for a trip and then hired another taxi.

Described Clothes

When this man left the Walker House for a trip he had a cap, a hat and two overcoats. If Bannas' story is correct you have him back in Belleville and at the house of Mrs. Farley. This time the maid did not answer. The third ring, that night was at the office door. It was answered by Mrs. Vermilyea who said "you here again?" He was taken upstairs, it has been proved, to her bedroom, a thing seldom done except to members of the family. Was it the accused? They were there for 10 minutes, then Mrs. Vermilyea said "I am going out for a few moments." They were seen by a Mr. Gorman walking on the sidewalk. Soon after there were heard blows and groans. One man saw two figures going to the Faulkner residence, he heard blows. The body was picked up with eight distinct blows about the head. Who was the man, who accompanied the woman, was it the accused? The man then ran away down the alley. Previously it was said by Bannas, this man had come back to the car and had said "you here yet?". This is the evidence given by the Crown.

Return Trip Spoken of

He returns to the Walker House that night. He asked for a key and is recognized, he gets a morning paper. He then goes upstairs for a short time and comes down again. He drives to Port Credit in a cab, the driver of which recognizes him. This is the morning of Oct. 5.

Most of these people who testified to the identity of the accused were not ones, who had fleeting glimpses of him but had talked with him.

Recognized at Hamilton

From Port Credit he goes on to Hamilton. He was recognized here by the clerk of another hotel. Also here, it was testified by an expert, the man who wrote the names on the two hotel registers is the same man.

The train from Hamilton was late; he feared that he might lose his connection with this plane trip previously arranged for. Then we have him at South Bend sending another telegram and a return message being handed back to him. Identification has also been made here.

Justice Jeffrey continuing, called attention of the jury to further recognition being made of the Mother of Bobsled Team Takes Ride Down Famous Lake Placid Run

(By Mrs. James Stevens)

Lake Placid, N.Y., Feb. 25—(AP) — Just as I thought I was going about as fast as anyone ever came down the Mt. Van Hoevenberg run, Hubert, my eldest son, who was piloting the sled, would call "let her go" to Curtis at the brake.

Paul, who sat behind me, kept calling for more braking and the three couldn't seem to agree as to the speed, that would suit my taste. But I liked it and I wish I had ridden sooner so that I could get used to it and see more as the sled went down.

They forgot the brake on the finish stretch and then I had a real ride. I wanted to go as fast as I could as long as I was making the ride, and we certainly sped along. I don't see how the boys ever collect their wits to know how or where to steer.

I wasn't frightened because I knew if there was any danger the boys wouldn't ask me to go with them. The only time I felt a little worried was when I lost hold of the strap at Whiteface, the hairpin turn, but I soon found it again and everything was all right. I didn't feel at all like falling off the sled as they tell me some people do.

My sons have been after me for five years to try the slide but I always felt there were enough Stevens bobbing. Like my first plane ride I kept putting it off and last year I decided to wait until my 70th birthday.

Now I'm glad I've finally got around to trying it. I can understand what the boys are talking about.

When the trip was over I didn't feel at all shaky even though the boys thought I should be.

Roy, juror on the Vermilyea murder trial watched the funeral of his father, Robert Roy, aged resident of Trenton, pass through the city on the way to West Huntingdon cemetery, where interment took place. It had been expected that all jurors would attend the funeral of Mr. Roy at Trenton on Sunday.

COLLAPSES, DIES AT COURT HOUSE

Albert Quincey Spectator, Victim of Heart Seizure

Death came suddenly to Albert Quincey of 3 Fahey Street, this city, early this Monday forenoon. Being interested in the proceedings at the court house, he left his home early this morning apparently in his usual state of health. He had not complained of feeling ill, but while waiting to go upstairs in the court room before court opened he was taken with a heart seizure and expired immediately. There was a small crowd about at the time and it is believed that climbing of steps and excitement caused the seizure.

The late Mr. Quincey, who was in his 62nd. year, was born in Belleville, his parents being the late Mr. and Mrs. John Quincey. He had resided in Belleville all his life and was well and favorably known by many friends who will regret his sudden death. For twenty years he was a machinist employed at the Canadian National Railways shops here. He was an adherant of the Church of England.

Surviving to mourn his sudden passing and to whom the sympathy of their friends will be extended, are the widow; one daughter, Miss Dorothy at home; two sons, Arthur of Belleville; Beverley Quincey at home, and an uncle, Mr. Benjamin Quincey of Belleville.

CHOPPING MILL BURNED

Accused Nods To His Friends

Harold W. Vermilyea entered the court room at the Assize Court shortly after nine o'clock this morning on the last day of his trial. He was wearing a suit of brown and gave a light nod of recognition to some friends.

He sat with his chair leaning against the right side of the dock and occupied that position for the entire morning. This position he has taken since the trial opened, his feet braced against the newell posts of the dock. A few adjustments of the horn-rimmed glasses were made and he concerned himself with his fingers and hands. In his face was considerable color. He did not glance about very much. About him sat his guards.

2 RIFLES STOLEN AFTER BREAK-IN

Walker's Hardware Store Burglarized Early Sunday

Gaining entrance by means of breaking a pane of glass and reaching in to unfasten a rear window, robbers broke, entered and burglarized Walker's Hardware Store early Sunday morning, stealing two valuable .22 calibre rifles and over 1,500 rounds of ammunition, that fitted the stolen rifles. The robbery was discovered by H. T. York, an employee of the Walker Hardware Co. who discovered the breakin, when he went to the store early Sunday morning to tend to the fires in the basement.

Mr. York discovered the rear window open and after a short investigation immediately called in the local police. Other employees were notified and after a general check-up of the stock it was disclosed, that only two .22 calibre rifles were missing, a single shot and a repeating rifle. Further search disclosed that over 30 boxes, 50 per box of .22 calibre shells were also stolen.

Careful scrutiny by the police brought out the fact that the robbery was completed by youths of a tender age, as the opening in the window through which they procured entrance is much too small to admit an adult. A rear door was open, however, and may have been opened by a young boy to later admit older accomplices. No snow having fallen early Sunday morning the foot prints underneath the windown were indistinguishable on the hard icy surface. The local police are still investigating, however.

HIGHWAYS COATED WITH GLARE ICE

Forecaster Says Wind Will Swing to Bring Cold Weather

(By the Canadian Press)

Strong easterly gales swept over Southern Ontario today bringing rain, sleet and snow which coated highways with glare ice and endangered the lives of travellers. The Meteorological Bureau at Toronto forecasted the wind would swing around to the north resulting in decidedly colder weather.

At Kitchener, a raging snowstorm —the most severe of the season, threatened for a time to block motor and street railway traffic. The blizzard, however, did not last long but many bad drifts were caused.

Rain fell in the Brantford and Galt districts after an early morning snowfall and highways were covered with a treacherous slippery crust.

Northeast winds brought a cold snap to Northern Ontario and there were snow flurries in the southern portion.

Following a brief thunderstorm early this morning an admixture of rain and sleet descended upon Stratford and district all morning, making travelling treacherous

Counsel Speak 4 Hours; Crown Charges Scheme, Denying Insanity Signs

Defence Does Not Admit Act's Commission in Murder Case

PLEA OF INSANITY

Crown Prosecutor George Urquhard, K.C., conducting the prosecution in the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea at the county court house today charged that the man accused of the crime of murdering his mother on the night of October 4, last, had acted in "a perfectly sane manner all through, and had planned the commission of the crime from the time he had left California step by step until his arrival back in his home town. "If we are to believe that the symptoms supposedly held by this man give evidence of a paraoidal condition, then I fear that many of us must feel that we should be examined," the Crown Prosecutor told the jury in his fifty minute address.

Defence Plea

Col. R. H. Greer, K.C., chief defence counsel, had previously addressed the jury in a two and one half hour address marked by a brilliance and oratory seldom heard in a local court. "This man's actions all through were those of a crazy man," he gave as his opinion. He said that defence did not admit the commission of crime, but if he did this he suggested that the jury bring in a verdict of 'not guilty and insane.' He added that there was an institution to take care of such a case. Col. Greer spoke for two hours' and a half.

At ten minutes after two o'clock this afternoon Mr. Justice Nicol Jeffrey, will begin his instructions to the jury.

Harold Vermilyea on trial for the past eleven days on the charge of murdering his 76-year-old, mother, Aurelia Vermilyea in this city on October 4, last, will probably know his fate today.

The well-groomed prisoner appearing little disturbed today by the proceedings since trial started, toyed with a small piece of wood, cleaning his nails, as he lolled in his seat this morning waiting for Court to open. The usual wad of gum on which he chews constantly, was again evident. A top coat, usually carried was not brought into court today by him.

For hours this morning one of the largest crowds yet to try and gain seats, waited outside the court for the doors to open. Overcome by the exertion and wait, one elderly resident dropped dead in the crush.

With a table full of exhibits, including photographs, reams of typewritten and printed documents and even volumes upon psychiatry and allied sciences, Col. R. H. Greer, K.C., chief defence counsel, assisted by Mr. C. A. Payne, K.C., and Mr. B. L. Smith waited, completely prepared to begin his fight to free his client from the grave charge. Crown Prosecutor G. Urquhart, K.C., also rested behind a table covered with books and papers. Mr. Urquhart has been assisted by Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C.

Address Is Opened

Col. Greer opened his address at 9:15 a.m. Facing the Jury, the chief defence reviewed the facts. "This man has been accused of killing his mother." Counsel then said. "There are three verdicts open to you. You may find him guilty, not guilty, or not guilty on the grounds of insanity. If the latter verdict is brought in he will be then regarded as a criminally insane man. He will be confined and incarcerated then for a period under the discretion of the Attorney General."

Col. Greer referred to the hereditary taint in the family. "In talking to a Jury composed largely of farmers you know, that it is a fact, that from time to time, this taint may be passed on even through domestic stock."

Cousin Worried Over Money

Fred and Gerald Vermilyea were incarcerated in an institution. Fred worried over money matters; Gerald worried because he lost his job and also worried over money matter. Insane people do not always act the same—the idiosyncrasies of one are not those of the other any more than sane people do. One name given him was that he was a manic-depressive. We agree now that he is a victim of dementia praecox. We know that there is no question of their sanity, they are well defined cases.

Col. Greer referred to another relative, Thomas, who broke dishes and was locked up. The institutions of those days were not so fully taken advantage of then, so he was locked up in his home. Reuben Vermilyea, a son of Thomas, was a morbid. He had a "wearied" manner; he saw spirits. Remember this is many years ago. You'll agree that a person who tries to keep spirits away has a well defined condition. John C. was as near like Reuben as could be—this man always saw a whole pot of money. He has "chests of it down in the swamp."

Other Relatives Noted

"We come to a sister, Sarah Moynes. There is some confusion about the age of her death, but I believe it was in her early 30's when she died—a suicide. The sum total is four suicides—Sarah and Karl Moynes, Phoebe Robertson and a Christie, who was a daughter. There are Fred and Gerald Vermilyea, Jane Jones Ketcheson, Elizabeth Jones Vermilyea (suffered from melancholia), Thomas Vermilyea had vicious moments, Reuben and Delilah Reid, who became childish.

One Became Childish

"Then Charles 'who became childish at 60.' That is all we have about him.

"So we have this fact established. There has been such a variety and degree of mental trouble that there is a blemish which doctors agree that any member under stress would break down under pressure much sooner than a normal mind.

"Having this established, I may well, fairly and properly ask you to do your duty well and truly to find this man not guilty upon the grounds of insanity. His Lordship will explain this later.

"You will be instructed, as is always the case, to see this man is given a reasonable doubt; he has the right to ask and demand the right of any reasonable doubt. We will not quibble or argue about what the case means or the seriousness of it.

"I perhaps in my own language described the case when I asked the doctor if there was not a cloud hanging over it from which lightning might strike at any time.

Tried to Get Away

"Harold, who was 49 last fall, was born with a bad stutter. I gather he was worse than the average young man. He graduated, still stammering, and took a course to cure it. Before he left home, the suicidal tendencies in the family had given the evidence of insanity; haunted by some misgivings within himself he got away as far from home as he could. You would think that as an older boy he would have stayed on the farm. We gather that he was a little afraid of himself. We find from the doctor, Dr. Robertson, that the first boy is always thought more of by the mother. So we find in this family that even tho' he was away, he never forgot—that he always wrote once a week and oftener on other occasions."

Accused Adored by Mother

I might point out that the shocking aspects of this case that he was the adored and petted son of a loving mother. A crime on the face of it like this that if a man committed such an act—Great God, he must have been insane! Everyone of you sitting in that box must have felt as I did, when you first heard it, that it must have been the work of a madman! This was your first thought.

Defence Counsel pointed out carefully here that he did not admit his client had done the crime charged. To support this, it was pointed out there was no iota of proof, that accused had ever held the hatchet. "Nicols, the hardware clerk, who was supposed to have sold it, was one man, who could not identify this man". "There was no trace of this man's finger prints upon this hatchet". Col. Greer pointed out this was admitted by Dr. Frankish. "All the evidence we have that a hatchet, we may admit, was bought in Simpson's store, was found later at the rear of the home, was purchased by a man 'resembling' the accused. To say that a man, who looks likes someone who bought a hatchet in a large store is dangerous evidence. The styles of these days make all men look alike."

AUTOMOBILE SKIDS INTO GUARD RAIL

When the automobile, which he was driving skidded on the icy pavement, Reginald L. Abbe, of Camp Borden, escaped serious injuries, when the vehicle crashed into a guard rail, breaking off four posts, about 1.30 a.m. today on highway No. 2 about two miles west of Deseronto. Abbe was returning to the Trenton airport with a borrowed car when the vehicle started to skid while proceeding around a curve. Abbe tried to straighten the path of the skidding auto, but without avail and it crashed into the fence. Both fenders, the radiator and steering apparatus of the motor car were all badly damaged, although the vehicle was driven to a local garage under its own power. The matter was reported to the highway traffic authorities by Abbe, upon his arrival in Belleville. The matter is being further investigated.

TRANSPORT SKIDS INTO MOTOR CAR

When a large transport allegedly tried to pass a locally driven automobile on the right hand side, a motor accident resulted near the corner of Ann and East Dundas Sts. early Sunday evening. Upon investigation by local police it was disclosed, that a large truck, being driven westward on Dundas St. by Delbert Sayeau, of Toronto, had attempted to pass an automobile, driven by Clifford Howie of this city just as the motor car was about to make a right hand turn off Dundas St. to proceed northward on Ann St. According to stories related to the police Howie was also going westward previous to the impact. The latter driver moved his vehicle towards the centre of the road and was about to make a right hand turn, as Sayeau, who was following in the wake of the Howie car, decided to pass the latter on the right hand side. Howie started to make his intended right hand turn, at the same time Sayeau applied his brakes but the large transport skidded on the city pavement and collided with the right hand side of the motor car. The Howie car was badly damaged about the right hand fender and running board. The matter was settled between the parties implicated before the arrival of the police.

CHIMNEY BLAZES CAUSE 2 RUNS

Shortly after the midnight hour Saturday the fire brigade had a run to a home on Cannifton Road and at a early hour this morning another run to Cannifton road. Chimney blazes were the cause of alarms. No damage resulted.

COLLEGE STUDENTS HOSTS AT PARTY

The students of Albert College were hosts to their lady friends at a skating party on Saturday evening under the chaperonage of Mrs. D. McMullen and Miss B. Ketcheson.

Skating started at 8 p.m. and continued until 9.30. Students and guests were then entertained in the Common-room by the Principal Rev. Bert Howard who gave an illustrated lantern lecture on "The Beauty and Magic of Snow." Shown on the screen were many actual photographs of snow flakes showing their myriad formations and exquisite beauty. Mr. Howard then gave an illustrated address on Vancouver Island. Over 120 pictures were shown. The illustrated lecture was not only very interesting, but of a fine informative and educational character.

Lunch was served, a sing song enjoyed and shortly after 11 p.m. the evening was closed with the singing of God Save the King.

COUNSEL SPEAK FOUR HOURS

Made Self Noticeable

Col. Greer pointed out that the accused if he was the man identified had made himself so noticeable during his trip from California by various acts, that he must have been insane. He did not carry out any plan of a sane man.

Defense, in his strong plea to the attentive jurors, carried them back to the money question in the year 1933, and the various letters purportedly written and received. The letter which was supposed to have been received by his sister, called an abusive letter" by Mrs. (Dr.) Faulkner was referred to as the first one of that nature ever received by her in her life. The fact, that all children of the murdered woman knew the contents of the will was pointed out.

"This man called both children after the names of his parents, one after the father, one after the mother."

Claims Some Germ

Previous to the divorce, there had been some germs of a mental condition, continued the Defence. He continued with reference to the orange grove owned by accused and his efforts to sell it by auction. He was unable to do this. "He finds himself with depreciated property. He is out of a job. He can't dispose of his real estate. His daughter has now become 19, and he has been divorced. It appears he did all that was possible to get work but failed. I suggest the weakness was there and the crack occurred just at this period."

Col. Greer referred to the suggestion, that the divorce had occurred over some spleen on the part of the accused. "It appears, that the whole thing did not justify a divorce."

No Suggestion of Waste

"Having got the $5,000 and spent it,—there is no suggestion of waste here, the man was not a drinker,—but it seems that any money he got seems to have been spent by one thousand being applied on the property, and the rest just evaporated. Then he was financially broke. It begins to become obvious, that in the letters, the matter of bringing up Aurelia was a great worry to him".

Col. Greer strode to the table, picked up several letters and faced the Jury again.

Rambling Letters

Reaching for them he pointed out the staccato-type sentences, sentences which rambled and carried the reader all over the world with a great rapidity on many large matters. Whole paragraphs were concerned with philosophies of the writer. At one point four sentences in three lines were read.

"A man who writes this type of letter, as Dr. Howland has shown you, is afflicted with euphonia—one system of a paranoid type, who constantly harbors a delusion of a conspiracy."

Col. Greer referred again to the letter received by Mrs. Faulkner and the fact that only one in that vein had been sent. From this time we see that the conspiracy delusion had started. He even tried to commit suicide soon after. All through this letter you find the same thing—the jumping from sentence to sentence. He starts off by philosophizing. Then he introduces his 'hard luck'. This indicates to me that at this time there was growing in his mind a gradual suspicion that some influence was being used to his disadvantage. You can see he was getting ready to pity himself and had commenced to brood, first about his position and later about his child. This to him had started to assume very desperate conditions.

Letter is Discussed

He felt nothing but destruction looming up. This letter of April 17, was very obviously an approach to the mother to divided the $20,000 among the four children. The very argument he used about economic conditions would apply more to his mother than him."

Col. Greer pointed out that in the letter a page and one-half had been written before the subject had been introduced. The remainder was full of irrelevances. "It was a higgledy-piggedy letter," pointed out Col. Greer. A second letter, with references to conditions in the "Polish corridor," was a later one. It had been marked "personal." It contained other irrelevances but "if this isn't an euphonic letter——". Salient parts of the message to his mother included references to a suggestion for his mother to give the writer $1,000, referred to the Treaty of Versailles and the Saar Valley and conditions abroad.

Again defence counsel emphasized the point that at this time a condition had formed in the writer's mental processes. "There must have been some germ of insanity and certainly the feeling to commit suicide, it has been proven.

Expenses Would be Great

Col. Greer referred to further evidence of this condition which could be secured in Ontario, Calif., by anyone interested, "but it all costs money to bring these witnesses here by defence."

"One deposition of a witness, Brown, before the commission at San Bernardino, calls attention to the queer actions of the accused. We find that he was even unable to remember orders from his own boss. He walked out in the middle of these orders; he became more nervous, there was an increase in his depression, his stuttering increased; the brain was not registering as it should have. Whatever responsibilities were in his mind were beginning to be manifested by outward manifestations. A disintegration was beginning inside. He was beginning to crack as Gerald and Fred and others before him did. His history is strikingly parallel with that of the others.

Actions Referred to

Pettinger (a second witness at the commission) refers to his "funny" actions, his face livid and odd-looking, his actions in the billiard room on different occasions. "We read in this evidence all through of the queer actions—such as trying on a great number of ties and then not buying them. He was beginning to crack, commencing to go.

"We have the cousin, Roy Vermilyea, a brother of Fred and Gerald; another witness, Miner, who had worked with accused, they all noted the peculiarities, the idiosyncrasies and mental exhibitions. The story told by Aurelia, reveals the great change in her father. He became more morose, more cruelly critical; she apparently noted these oddity of actions, of his bouncing out of the theatre. He couldn't sit still. On one occasion he tried to commit suicide; I gather she had begun to watch him. She found him one day mixing ant poison and she took it away from him. During the three months preceding this case Aurelia was with him pretty much all the time; then she went to college—the nurse was gone, there was no one to control him on his mental path. He became broodier, the brain was beginning to grow as the Vermilyea brain was apt to go under some mental strain or stress.

Medical Evidence all Right

"Medical evidence, I think, is pretty good evidence—I don't want you men to believe that I am not countenancing this—I would not attempt to justify the killing of this woman, no matter who did it." Col. Greer emphasized again that the unwarranted violence had given every indication that only a maniac could have carried it out. He cited again the close and loving relationship between mother and son thru' the years. I ask you if you believe this man wilfully murdered his mother because she did not give him $5,000? He may have been the means of so doing but if he did do it, then there is not the slightest doubt of his condition at the time.

Col. Greer to further strengthen his argument, carried the Jury along with him through the various other incidents previous to the time. "We find statements from witnesses of his very objectionable language, his striking poor little Than, his son, with a pool cue. It all showed very strongly a nature, that is breaking down under great mental stress.

Everyone Recognized Accused

Defense Counsel called attention to the accused's coming to Toronto and of his stopping at the Walker House. "This clerk saw him and recognized him; every person, who saw him appeared to recognize him. This clerk said he remembered him coming in the door, and this hotel is a busy one. Other witnesses saw him and remembered him. His actions were not those of a normally acting man. We know there is a mental disease known as a paranoiac condition. The symptoms of this condition are all readily recognizable; we find them very apt to consider themselves persecuted or conspired against—he believed his sister, who still likes him greatly, was against him. You have the fact that Gerald was a dementia praecox patient, paranoid type.

No Purchase First Trip

He came over and called on the same night at his aunt's house. This was on Monday, but the hatchet had not been bought on this occasion not until October 2nd, after the first visit. If he had planned to do damage it would have been brought with him. Every action he made after this was noticeable. He dickered with taxi cab operators on the same night he was supposed to have committed the act—the greatest crime a man could commit— he got in the front seat of the car and in a voice without a tremor he bade the driver to return. There was nothing about his actions to indicate anything other than he might have taken a walk. On the return trip, he slept part of the way.

On that same day, also he hired another taxi man—three taxi men, in such a manner as to positively identify himself to them. One of them even argued heatedly with him.

Only a maniac's sanity could have allowed this man to lead him to the prisoner's dock, where he is now. But if it was a plan, it was the plan of a paranoiac, which he has been reported to be.

Movements Traced

Col. Greer continues: "He gets on the train on which there was a very intelligent porter, telegraphs at Grand Rapids under an assumed name. Then he spends his time on the train tramping in merely a restless manner and talking with six or seven passengers. He sat in a parlor car, where he could easily be seen, he had the return telegram brought into him, he identified himself beyond peradventure of the law; every step he took, every move he made was a tangled mess of incriminating evidence, which led inevitably to his arrest at California just an hour or two after he got back. Was that the plan any intelligent man would carry out? Don't forget that, under the law if that crime were traced to him, he would be unable to share in the mother's estate. He would you would suppose, know this law.'

"The man pursued some indefinite paranoid plan, to this city for some indefinite purpose—God knows what, but the hatchet was not purchased until a day later—had himself clearly identified by the maid and then returned.

Act of Stupid Brain

Col. Greer referred again to the erasure of the record in the garage book. "He identified himself clearly to Fontaine (owner) but his stupid brain did not realize the claim check stub left on the floor of the car. It was just another slip in the crazy plan if this man did the deed, so stupidly revealed—so stupid it might be written as a funny story how not to commit a crime.

Extradition which the accused man so readily agreed upon should have been fought by him if there had been any appreciation of the act, averred Col. Greer.

"Dr. Frankish, practising thirty years, tells us that for 18 years he has given evidence in courts of law always on the part of the Crown—we could call him a Crown witness.

Medical Testimony

Col. Greer referred to several answers made by the physician-witness to Mr. Justice Jeffrey, in which the medico was charged to have made confused answers. Dr. Mitchell, a second crown witness, was quoted as saying the accused man was emotionally unstable.

"Dr. Howland, the third crown witness, testified that accused is insane; we have Dr. Robertson, very widely read as a medical man, acquainted with accused, says the man is unquestionably insane, points out that this condition will eventually develop until they crack.

Says Three Agree

"Dr. Armour told you the man, in his opinion, was sane. He disagrees with four doctors." Col. Greer asked the jury to consider the word of a doctor who has lived near and had known a family for more than 30 years.

"There is one other thing—the fact of this brace he wears. He was told once by a doctor he had arthritis. Other doctors have examined and X-rayed him but found no evidence of the disease. He has worn this brace for 10 1-2 years without hearing the word of any other doctor on the disease, hot or cold he wears this clumsy thing all the time in spite of the fact there is no sign of the disease."

The story of the witness-cell-mate Sullivan, was referred to by Col. Greer. This matter, defence counsel said looked like a "stool pigeon" arrangement to me, whether it is or not.

This man says he goes into the cell laughing and feeling good—tripping in—and says, 'I asked the man how he would like to trade sentences for mine. He told he would be glad to trade and pay $10,000.' Col. Greer then re-read the full testimony previously published.

Story to Cell-Mate

"There is the story told by Sullivan. Vermilyea had said that he had done everything for this woman—he wasn't even married to her. If this is true, wasn't it the act of a maniac? If the Crown story is to be accepted, before he left California at all he secured a caretaker, Swayn, with no bond of friendship no pledge to secrecy, he places a list of hand-written names of his mother and the rest of the family; he leaves this behind. Starting out like this, can you imagine any crazier act.

"Imagine a man with any mentality at all doing such a thing! See where it leads to! Surely it was suicide he was committing, in providing this in his own handwriting.

"I suggest that with his family's history, his search for a job unended, his expenses mounting up, all these things were closing in upon him as they closed in upon Gerald who worried himself into the asylum from a lost job and like Fred who had worried over money lost some nine years before." It was not the case of the brand of Cain nor the claw of a matricide that was revealed, Col. Greer argued, but the act of a crazy man.

"When he was put to the acid test, with the family record he had, when the lightning struck, he succumbed and he's there," said counsel pointing to the dock. "a son of one of your oldest families, one of your own people, who have been here over three-quarters of a century, his own people brought up here, every collateral being found scattered about up to the third and fourth generation, can you honestly go into that room, and after pondering over the evidence, on this unparalleled act, which rocked this province with its ferocity, and not find that this is the act of a madman?

Asks Verdict, "Not Guilty, Insane"

"I ask you so to find him, find him not guilty and insane. There are institutions where such persons can be taken care of.

This man, defence averred, is perhaps more to be pitied as some time long before he was born, something happened which made the act the conception of a mad man's brain by which the tie between the mother who had loved her son so much and her son who had loved her was severed by the blow which struck

Col. Greer concluded his stirring address at this point and the jury was excused for a brief recess.

Crown Addresses Jury

Following a recess period of fifteen minutes the jury returned to their seats. Crown Prosecutor George Urquhart, K.C., immediately upon the permission of court, addressed them. A compliment was expressed by him for the capable handling of the 9-day case and the excellent and fair address that had been made by defence counsel. In clear and measured tones, the Crown prosecutor referred to the incidents of the fatal night of Oct. 4. "She (Mrs. Vermilyea) was cut down by an instrument very obviously a hatchet; we find this by comparison of the cutting edge on the front and the serrated back of the head.

No Actual Eyewitnesses

"My learned friend has held out a hope that the accused be acquitted. It is true that no one actually saw this crime committed, but this is not surprising; very seldom is a murder observed; through this the Crown has built up a very thorough case. We find the incidents lead up to it. The accused was very hard up for money. He secured $5,000 from his mother and goes through it. He writes another letter—he wants the money, and there is a suggestion of something unless more is coming. He refers not only to the need for himself but for his growing family.

'Wants to Be Honest'

'He wants to be honest' he says and also that it is hard for a poor man to be honest. In these etters we find all through these requests in which he cites his need.

Mr. Urquhart referred to the accused man leaving California. He charged that he registered and was recognized at the Walker House, Toronto, where he gave it is charged an assumed name, "Carter of Washington". He charged that accused came to Belleville on Oct. 1st to spy out the land, probably the alleys of the section. "Then there was the evidence of the purchase of the hatchet. At the police line-up he picked Vermilyea who was with 12 others in a police line-up as the one who resembled the man. This was done again in court here. "Also I point out that this hatchet was an uncommon one; it was marked down in price; it would be suited as a weapon, said Mr. Urquhart.

What Crown Charges

Crown referred to the messages left in California, and went on charging that on that night the accused leaves the cab and returns to it, then he gets away after he has made sure it is waiting and then he goes to the house of his mother and is recognized. He and his mother leave and she is recognized walking down the street. Later there is the accident. He stands close to his mother as she is struck down. An artery spouts blood and a suit gets splotches on it, afterward analysed as blood. Some of it is found on the car interior."

The police, the counsel said, follows the trail to Toronto where at another hotel an assumed name is used, Mr. Urquhart went on. "A paper is purchased and the man finds now that he is a fugitive. His actions then become those of a hunted man. On the train and plane he is known by another assumed name—a different one each time. Then he telephones his sister and tells her he has been upstate. We have proved that he could make the trip here and back in the interval.

"The maid has recognized the voice, the walk, the resemblance to the accused. Other witnesses have also done the same.

Mr. Urquhart declared the crown's contention—"It was a well laid plan gentleman, but for a few points of discovery he would have returned and been able to live the rest of his life without being found out.

Sullivan Defended

"Mr. Urquhart refers to the testimony of Sullivan, one of the chief witnesses. "He has been called a stool pigeon, but he is not, he has been, I believe, truthful all through. Sullivan asked this man, 'have you shot a man'. The man said yes, because he did not want to say it was his mother. Then the date is mentioned 'up in Canada', tallyd as they were told this witness. The question of the insanity plea was then brought up by him, but he was told that it was no good.

"I doubt if there is a more solid chain of evidence against an accused, such as we have in this case, ever been nbrought into a Canadian court of law."

Code Cited

Mr. Urquhart called attention to the criminal code in the respect of cases of this kind.

"Assume that this man is not normally mental; that he was hard-up—it is not the law that he can escape punishment just because he is insane. Life would not be safe if he was to be excused. Unless at the time he was incapable of the kind and quality of the act he should if guilty be punished. Consider whether the accused at the time alleged was suffering from a disease of the mind, he must be punished, if found guilty.

"Opinions of medical man given here say he is sane and not suffering; defence witness medically state that he was insane. You are able to judge yourselves as to whether he is suffering from this paranoidal condition. If all these symptoms given us by the doctors could be taken literally, then a good many of the rest of us should feel as if we want to give ourselves up."

Details of Plan Charged

Mr. Urquhart referred to the detail of the plans charged by the Crown as having been made by accused to carry out the plan and the commission of the crime. The scheme involved the borrowing of the $1,000, he charged, the help of Swain, the rides in a plane, taxi, trains and registrations at various hotels.

As to Back Condition

A paranoiac is said to suffer delusions, the one in this instance was referred by defence as the condition of his back and of the needless brace worn, but this was no false belief; he was told by a doctor he had this condition. Another great delusion brought up was that a sister and an aunt were influencing the mother. This was no false belief because the sister was against his securing this money."

No Outburst Charged

"Then the letters, Dr. Howland says they show the man insane; they appear to me to be well connected, chatty, well written letters. They show a well read understanding of conditions and give a good moral tone. If there was an idea of persecution held, don't you think after this refusal of the mother to give more, there would have been an outburst in the following letters? There is no delusion, or no suggestion of persecution in these letters that follow, and you can take them with you, Gentlemen, when you retire to study them.

Family's Mental History

"We hear a lot of evidence of insanity in the family. First there is the evidence of a very old lady, 78, and in her evidence there are two or three strange things. Thomas, she said, became senile at 70. This isn't insanity at this age. She tells that Thomas was a rather harmless old fellow, but he was locked up late in life. He had a "wearied" manner. He broke some dishes—didn't like to be locked up. He was a religious man, a Quaker and Reuben had to listen to a lot of prayers; we all did years ago. This evidence given may quite possibly be colored. She speaks of others of the family possessing hallucinations. Doctors agree that the marks of a paranoid are the hallucinations; the accused man has none.

"We turn to suicides in the family. We find mention made of one lady who at "change of life" did so. But this is not unusual. Two others are in another family altogether, connected by only half-sisters. Men have been known to commit suicide but we can't trace everyone as the result of insanity.

Contrast With Cousins

"We have Gerald and Fred (insane cousins). These people were quite different from the prisoner, they suffered delusions; Gerald once came from a bridge game and told that the neighbor had two revolvers on the table; he found people annoyed him, and he threw water on the floor and threw boots at imaginary people, but he always stayed around to tell of it. The other brother had similar delusions.

Parents Sane

Mr. Urquhart continued. "You all know the sterling qualities of the father of the accused. For 48 years he was continually elected on Township Council; Mrs. Vermilyea was a fine, healthy, bright woman. If there had ever been a hereditary strain in this family the introduction of Mrs. Vermilyea would have done much to counteract it. Any weakness is generally counteracted by bringing into it fresh blood.

Paranoia Defined

"Take this plan made by accused, one long continuous plan, Dr. Armour said if this man was a paranoid he would be unable to keep the plan in its entirety in his head to carry it through. His ideas would change from day to day. Gerald and Fred did not run away—they revelled in the mischief they did.

A paranoiac acknowledges his crime, he gives himself up. Here we have the accused running down the alley and getting in the cab. A paranoiac is apathetic. The accused is not; the examinations made have found him truculent and talkative and in other moods.

Discussing the question of the accused's guilt, Mr. Urquhart asked:

"Did the accused know when he struck his mother on the head that he would kill her? All the doctors agree that the man did, that he knew she would die. Dr. Frankish is not an expert in sanity, does not profess to be, but his evidence merely corroborates that of the other four doctors that he knew of the consequences of the act.

Knowledge of Wrong

"Did he know the act was wrong—an act for which he could be tried? Dr. Armour and Dr. Mitchell said he did. Dr. Howland said he did not. Dr. Robertson said he knew that he could be arrested for it and that he knew it was wrong. If he knew it was right why did he run away? Because, he charged, "he knew if he stayed, he would be arrested. Why did he return to the taxi that night? Just to see if his way was clear for a getaway. Why did he use assumed names, erase records from a Los Angeles garage? My friend has told you he was pretty cool when he got back in the cab—he had merely steeled himself to his course of action, set aside all scruples. He dealt several blows—why? because after first one he knew he'd have to finish. If there had been a policeman nearby would he have done it?

Hope to Benefit, Charged

Mr. Urquhart referred to motive. It could not be presumed, he said, that the prisoner knew of the law of legacy. Mr. Cameron was compelled to look it up himself. He knew he stood to share one quarter of the estate.

"No, gentlemen, he gambled" charged Mr. Urquhart, "and he lost. If he had a grievance why did he not kill the aunt, the sister? No, gentlemen, again I tell you that he stood to and hoped to benefit by the act. It has been told you that an insane man would kill those whom he had a grievance against.

Mr. Urquhart paused:

"I've tried to bring forth everything in this in an impartial manner. You are picked as the men who are to try this case, picked from among the most substantial representatives of the county. To you are entrusted the lives of the fellow citizens of your county; when you leave this room after the court has instructed you and you bring in your verdict, having done this in all seriousness, whatever the result it may be, you will retire with the consciousness of duty well done. Mr. Urquhart concluded.

Justice Jeffrey at this point adjourned court until 2:10 this afternoon when he would instruct the jury.

EIGHT VESSELS BADLY DAMAGED IN HOWLING GALE

The vessel gave its position as about 46 North Latitude, 8 West Longitude in the Bay of Biscay.

In the same area the Italian steamer Caterina Madre, terrifically battered by mountainous seas as it wallowed helplessly from loss of its propellor, broadcast an urgent S.O.S. "This afternoon will be too late," said the message, picked up by Lloyd's in London at 1.20 a.m. (8.20 p.m. Sunday E.S.T.) The same vessel encountered difficulties last Friday and a tug was sent to its assistance.

Another Italian steamer, the Speitro, reported she was in distress in the Mediterranean Sea. Her S.O.S. was picked up by the Casablanca radio station.

The Ottinge, a British vessel, was in trouble for the second time in three days. Her message to Lloyds said she had broken from her tow line and was in urgent need of aid from a ship to pump oil to the windward and quiet the seas crashing against her superstructure. The Ottinge lost its rudder off Lands' End Friday night.

The United States Shipping Board freighter Oakman reported it lost its rudder 700 miles north of the Azores but was in no immediate danger.

The S.S. Newport News was standing by.

Messages Garbled

The Greek steamer Delphol, the Swedish steamer Delphinus and the British freighter Hillcroft added their messages to the steady stream of distress signals which flashed from the storm-lashed ocean.

Some confusion existed over the identities of the Delphoi and the Delphinus and it was considered possible they may be the same vessel. Fragments of messages picked up at Bordeaux indicated neither the Delphoi nor the Hillcroft was in immediate danger of sinking, but the signals were so garbled the radio station was unable to obtain details of their situations. Both vessels were off the Spanish coast.

From the Pacific Ocean word of an accident to the Japanese motor ship Taihei Maru which left her helpless 250 miles west of Cape Flattery with disabled engines. A coast guard cutter was sent to her aid.

The Hamburg America Liner New York reached New York two days late after battling what the captain described as one of the worst storms in his experience.

The French freighter Auvergne, which sent out an S.O.S. two days ago, was last reported to be still anchored at sea. The vessel's radio apparently had failed as she did not answer calls from coastal stations.

The French liner Le Chellah narrowly avoided colliding with two derelicts, which it picked up at sea and took in tow. The tow line broke and the helpless crafts bore down upon Le Chellah as they were swept before the gale. They finally were beached.

RAIL DEBT SLASH IS RECOMMENDED BY THE AUDITORS

Copies of the report, the Globe story says, are also being distributed for study by the House of Commons and the Railway and Shipping Committee members.

In it a comprehensive programme for relieving the financial structure of the C.N.R. of some of its debt burden, inherited from private ownership days, is outlined.

Highlights of the report, the Globe states, are the following recommendations:

Cancellation in the C.N.R. books of $165,627,738 on account of old Grand Trunk Railway stocks acquired by the government without direct cash consideration, and which the arbitrators have found had "no value."

Transfer by the government to the railway all the capital stock of the Canada Northern Railway, (valued at $100,000,000) now owned by the Dominion, and which originally cost only $10,000,000.

In return for which the C.N.R. should give the Dominion government 180,000 shares of its capital stock.

Cancellation of all interest accrued on government loans on the C.N.R. books, totalling $424,000,000 for reasons stated in the report.

Elimination of duplication of liabilities on books of railway and government, which is misleading and injurous to the nation's credit.

Issue of 5,000,000 shares of no-par-value stock of the C.N.R. to the government in exchange for obligations of Canadian National, Canadian Northern, and Grand Trunk Pacific railway companies.

MORE TEA IS USED GROWERS REPORT

Encouragement of Tea Drinking Meets With Success

Like the wheat in Canada, the tea industry was, a few years ago, faced with collapse. Not only was there a surplus of tea from existing plantations but the problems loomed dark for years ahead, as the young tea gardens which would come into bearing during the next few years would greatly augment existing stocks. To meet and deal with these problems effectively the tea interests of the British Empire combined to form the Empire Tea Growers' Association with headquarters in London, England. The organization not only assumed control over Empire tea production but began a vigorous effort to increase the consumption of tea in selected areas within the Empire.

Last year saw the inauguration in Canada of this campaign to drink more tea. When interviewed recently at his headquarters in Montreal, Mr. F. E. B. Gourlay, Commissioner in Canada, said:

"As in 1934, the press will be the chief medium in 1935 to carry our message to the consumer, although this year we will use radio to some extent also. Last year we endeavoured to tell the consumer a little about tea—as a product—this year we will stress tea the beverage, its delicious and healthful qualities. We want to encourage the habit of the odd cup of tea at any time during the day—a delightful and sociable custom which ha been firmly established in the Old Country for very many years. Our press advertising will be supplemented by interesting talks with motion pictures given by our lecturing staff to schools, church organizations and clubs."

Bridge St. Church Sunday School Celebrates Anniversary

Rev. A. D. Cornett of Smith's Falls Speaks to Children

"Educating for Christian Character," was the keynote of an address delivered to the scholars, teachers and officers of Bridge St. Sunday School, and other members of that church at the 113th. anniversary service of the Sunday School held in Bridge St. Church yesterday morning, by Rev. A. D. Cornett, M.A., B.D., O.B.E., of Smith's Falls.

In an opening phrase Rev. Cornett pointed out to the congregation the very important work of a Sunday school, "the basis of all religious education," as he termed it. "Despite the fact that more Canadian children are attending public school and remain in the classrooms for a longer period than they did a generation ago, we find a marked increase in juvenile crime in our country today," stated the speaker after introducing his subject of the morning. "Some people blame the late war, when fathers were absent from home, but I'm afraid that this is grossly exaggerated; second, others blame the influx of the automobile, and it must be granted that the motor car facilitates escape from crime but one should not blame material things if the natural instinct is not present to be cultivated. Thirdly, the increase of insanity is blamed much for the increase of juvenile crime," added the speaker as he quoted figures to the extent that five times as much money is being expended in the United States today in the effort to prevent crime, as is being spent on the education of today's child.

"Of course, when we talk of increased education we must be careful as this education does not prove fertile ground for potential young criminals in which to grow as one specialist puts it, 'character growth does not always follow the imparting of knowledge to a child.' A Sunday School pupil may know all the work laid out by the teacher but if no emotional effects are gained, practically all is lost. These various conduct, moral and religious tests in Sunday School actually reveal little of the pupils' character," pointed out Rev. Cornett as he assured especially the teachers that they should share, with the pupils, a created or actual experience in which the pupil may enter, instead of exalting the student, as the revolt of youth today is merely their stand against the disciplines of the past generation."

Assist Growing Mind

"We must assist the growing mind to have reliance of its own, train this mind to search for knowledge of the right type, instead of giving out moral philosophies and exaltations of our own," instructed the speaker to teachers and parents alike as he definitely pointed out that the home, the Sunday School and the church have to band together to preserve the youth of today. "The earliest impressions gained by a growing mind are gathered in the home, where a great Christian teaching can be founded, to be subsequently assisted and co-operated by the Sunday School and the church. "There is no higher work in the world than the teaching of Christian character." stated Mr. Cornett in closing.

During the service Rev. Mr. Cornett was assisted by Mr. J. E. Shortt, superintendent of Bridge St. Sunday School, while the school orchestra supplied the music during the singing of hymns, augmented by the church organ, played by Prof. Hunt. The Sunday school junior choir supplemented the regular choir and sang a children's chorus, while the church choir sang "O, God Our Help in Ages Past." The orchestra was directed by Duncan Lewis. In the afternoon open session was held in the school rooms, attended largely by scholars and their parents. Superintendent Shortt gave a short biography of the school since its inception in 1822. The original school was organized by a Mr. Osgoode of England; other workers to be mentioned were Billa Flint, William Johnson, P. E. O'Flynn, all deceased. Mr. Shortt has been at the head of the Sunday School for the past five years. Some of the original mentors included Dr. Marshall, Dr. Geo. Cooper, James Bickford and P. G. Seldon. Rev. Mr. Cornett addressed the school gathering in the afternoon.

During the morning service the junior choir was placed in the gallery of the church from where they sang their choruses with Prof. Hunt supplying the accompaniments on the organ. Other Sunday school pupils assembled in the school rooms and marched into the church and took front seats for the service. service.

REFORM PROGRAM ON ITS OWN FEET

Not Dictated by Coming Election Premier Tells Audience

TORONTO, Feb. 25.—(CP)—The Government's reform programme was not dictated by the coming election. Prime Minister R. B. Bennett declared here on Saturday night, when he addressed the second annual rally of the Federation of Young Canada Conservative Clubs. If the reforms comprised in the programme had been attempted in 1930, 1931, 1932, or 1933. Results would have been disastrous, he added. A start had been made in 1934 with the Central Bank, Marketing Legislation and the Farm Debts Adjustment Act.

With Denton Massey, Toronto, recently appointed Conservative Campaign Director for Ontario, the Prime Minister was speaker at a rally, which brought together delegates of 93 Ontario Conservative Youth Clubs. The visible audience was estimated at 2,500. Gordon Graydon, Brampton, who had previously been re-elected President of the Federation, introduced the speakers.

In his first major political speech since taking over duties of Ontario Campaign Director, Mr. Massey stated; that the Prime Minister's Reform programme had caused him to offer his services. Mr. Bennett, he said, had set about effecting Reforms at the earliest moment they could be attempted with security and safety. The Prime Minister was "a statesman first, a party leader second."

Mr. Bennett referred to the Ottawa Trade Agreements, and exclaimed against Liberals on the ground, that they refused to admit their value.

"Why do they not put politics aside?" he asked. "and say 'well done fellow Canadians'." He charged Liberals with placing Opposition i.. the way of Government's constructive efforts.

The alternative to Reform was Socialism or Communism, Mr. Bennett stated. Without Reform there was the threat of anarchy. He urged organization and work for coming election. Speeches and applause would not win the contest

USE HYDROPLANE FOR TAKE-OFF

Smaller Cabin Plane Would Then be Able to Cross Ocean

London, Feb. 25—(CP-Havas)—A huge hydroplane intended to provide a take-off in mid-air for a smaller cabin plane was reported envisaged by British aviaton circles today as a means of providing trans Atlantic air service.

Officials of Imperials Airways were said to have ordered construction of two novel type planes at a Rochester, Kent factory. If experiments next summer are successful, officials were quoted as saying, the government would provide necessary financial aid for a regular service.

The projected hydroplane would be equipped with a platform on its wings. It would fly aloft, carrying a four-motored 1,000 h.p. cabin plane. The latter would take off from mid-air under its own power to cross the ocean, the hydroplane returning to land again.

The plan was devised because the smaller plane normally could not take off from the ground with enough fuel to cross the Atlantic.

VALENTINO'S FORTUNE GONE

Hollywood, Feb. 25 (CP)—Ill fortune has dogged the footsteps of some of those, who were once close to the late Rudolph Valentino, whose romantic role in "The Shiek" earned for him the title of "the screen's great lover."

Rudolph made a large salary but he was a free spender. When he died his fortune was not great.

Only a few weeks ago, his brother Guglielmo, to whom he left most of his estate, announced he had been turned out of his home and was looking for a job.

Jean Acker, Rudolph's first wife, has also had her adversities. Once a prominent screen actress, Miss Acker will begin work today at a film studio—in a "bit" part.

KILLED IN PLANE CRASH

Winnipeg, Feb. 25.—(CP)—Investigation was underway today into the crash of a Canadian Airway Ltd., plane on the ice of Kanuchuan Rapids, 300 miles north of Winnipeg in the gold country lying between Island Lake and God's Lake.

Only occupant of the plane, Pilot Alvin Davis Keith succumbed a few minutes after the accident to injuries suffered when the plane struck the ice. Keith, 28 years old, is survived by his widow, residing in Winnipeg. Canadian Airway officials here were unable to explain the accident. They said the machine had only recently been overhauled.

FIRE DESTROYS FINLEY SCHOOL

Children Dismiss in Orderly Fashion as Flames Spread

Tweed—Fire, breaking out between the ceiling and the roof of the Finley School on Wednesday morning while the classes were in session, quickly destroyed the frame building. Miss Gertrude Brown, of Tweed, the teacher, quickly marshalled her charges outside. The children were unable to salvage their books and supplies. Finley School, known also as "Woodchuck" School was situated six miles west of Tweed near Lodgeroom. For the present school will assemble in a hall situated in the community.

Mr. Frank R. Hayward will leave early in March for his home in Newfoundland where he will enter the employ of the Woods Department of the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co. Mr. Hayward is a graduate of the Ontario Forestry College and for some years has been in the employ of the Ontario Government Forestry Branch office in Tweed. Mr. and Mrs. Hayward will be greatly missed in Tweed where they have made many friends. Both have been interested in the work of the Anglican church and the A.Y.P.A.

The first contingent of men from Tweed to the Faulkner Highway Camp returned this week well satisfied with the treatment accorded them. The second group of eighteen men left on Wednesday to succed them for a period.

Mr. Dan. barnett, son of Mr. and Mrs. Claude Barnett, has joined the staff of the Royal Bank as junior clerk.

Miss Grace Moran was unable to attend to her teaching duties at the Consolidated School on Thursday owing to illness.

The Board of Tweed Consolidated School held their regular February meeting in Miss A. M. Rayburn's office on Wednesday night. Business of a routine nature was transacted.

ADDRESSES CLUB ON YUKON TRAVELS

Bonarlaw—On Tuesday evening of last week Mr. R. A. Elliott of Deloro, guest speaker at the regular meeting of the St. Marks Mens' Club delighted the members and guests present with a most interesting illustrated address on The Yukon. Mr. Elliott was able to speak of many of the scenes thrown on the screen as places he had visited and was in some of the pictures himself, having spent two seasons in the Yukon on a surveying expedition.

The audience included a number of visitors from Marmora. The following gave short addresses and expressed their pleasure at being present and hearing Mr. Elliott's very instructive talk, viz: Messrs H. W. Sabine, I. E. Gale, H. Garrett, D. E. Bell, L. K. Crawford, M. Corrigan, C. H. Buskard and Rural Dean A. B. Caldwell. Mr. Gale stated he found the pictures especially interesting to him as he spent four years in the Yukon Territory and knew many of the places shown very well. He recognized immediately the building in which he taught school while in the Yukon. Mr. Gale is the Principal of the High School at Marmora this year.

Rev. A. B. Caldwell extended a cordial invitation to all members of St. Marks Mens' Club to visit the St. Paul's Men's Club at Marmora on Wednesday evening. The invitation was gratefully acknowledged by the President, Mr. Baker, who hoped some of the members would avail themselves of the opportunity.

Mrs. (Rev.) W. G. Swayne expressed the thanks of the ladies who were invited to be present to hear Mr. Elliott's address.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Elliott and also Mr. C. H. Buskard who assisted with the slides.

During the luncheon period Rev. Canon Swayne gave out a list of ten words, which, much to the amusement of the onlookers and the amazement of those who tried, were nearly all misspelled by educators, clergymen, editors and business men.

The meeting was closed with the National Anthem.

THE YOUTH

The future of youth, and in that the future of the nation, lies in the hands of educators, Franklin D. Roosevelt told Atlantic City in an address at the convention of the American Guidance and Personnel

He said:—

"As the young boys and girls, because of the conditions prevailing, I find myself in smaller groups of those who have to earn their living into a community and having found that job, if they want to marry, going to get married on wages.

"Hope, of course, that the situation will improve and soon, and we hope that we will be able to help them to do by doing more to develop for themselves, if they have to use their minds, will be better to find jobs for themselves. So many men feel that if they have trained themselves to do certain things, and cannot get a job along the lines that they are trained, they are not fitted to do anything

"Of course, we have not as yet been able to survey the necessities around us to try to direct young people according to their aptitudes and help them to swell the ranks in professions and work where already the supply is greater than the demand, but I hope that this will come to that. But in any case, if there is one has a vocation, they are going to stick at it until they find the particular job that they can fill.

"But with a training that has taught them to use their minds, they can do many things along the way. And, if they have learned that they are not living for themselves alone, but that wherever they may be they have put down roots and become a part of the community in a way which would make that community miss them if they were taken out of it.

"And I, in all our education, I think we need to emphasize more and more the fact that we are moving toward a world in which we think about each other.

"We know that various parts of the country have had all kinds of difficulty, but, because we were fairly well provided in the beginning for the type of conditions existed in other parts of the country, and if there is anything in which I am grateful it is the fact that we were forced upon us the knowledge of conditions which we do not see in many parts of our own country, because, having acquired that knowledge, we are left with the requirement that it is our today of interest in other people, but not allow those conditions to continue, and I believe that we can gradually, we will make this country gradually move forward for better conditions and, as they improve, I feel that the community will gain from the improvement.

"And I don't stop at our national consideration, I believe, of course, that the community live can extend our interests and will we realize that as a national community we have the interest of our people at heart.

"And it is this which the youth of this land before it must spring from the schools that teach youth. Whether you teach a mother, whether you teach a boy or you cannot teach what you should and you must acquire the knowledge which you want young people to have enough you."

WORLD'S OLDEST CITY

Digging through the bottom of the mound in the mound of the ancient city of Tepe Gawra, in Northern Iraq, archeologists of the University of Pennsylvania Museum and a School of Oriental Research and the University of Pennsylvania Museum have the site of an eleventh and twelfth city. Charles Bache, youthful leader of the joint expedition, announced today that it may prove to be the oldest known. Soundings beneath it revealed older levels which may go back to 6000 B.C.

The people of the eleventh level were surprisingly modern. Tentatively dated as 4000 B.C., they were excellent builders and craftsmen, had invented the true arch, made jewelry of electrum, a natural mixture of gold and silver, knew how to play chess, and were possibly familiar with the story of Adam and Eve.

They carried on a brisk trade with distant peoples, and had an important leather working industry. Most modern touch of the women of that ancient city were confirmed users of cosmetics. Kohl, a beauty preparation still in use by women in the Near East, had been invented. It is a powder of antimony used to darken the eyes.

Tepe Gawra, which means "Great Mound", is regarded as one of the most important archeological sites of the Near East. It originally was a huge mound composed of the debris of centuries. Excavation has yielded an almost unbroken series of stratified cultural deposits, of which the most recent dates from about the fifteenth century B.C. Beneath this topmost layer, in the order of age, lay the levels of earlier cities one on the other, like leaves of a book.

Two-thirds of the mound remains to be excavated, and diggers expect to find at least ten more occupation levels.

REVOLVER MENACE

But that nearly one citizen in every hundred should be permitted to possess firearms is ridiculous. This is not a wild statement, but a matter of fact in many cities where men and women go in imminent danger of being shot. The number of persons and homes that need such violent protection is so small that nothing seems to justify the fact that in at least one house out of every fifty there lies a revolver, These weapons are never used, even when the occasional advisability of using them arises.

It is not long since a judge, in passing sentence on a young man, convicted of carrying a revolver, in a main street in Montreal, pointed out to him and to the public at large that firearms are almost never carried for any good purpose. For the ordinary law-abiding citizen a revolver is a useless thing.

Many owners of firearms are not registered with the provincial police, and among these owners of illicit weapons the two men who held up the bank last week are probably numbered. Yet the presence of so many weapons in private houses encourages the man who would like to have one for no good purpose to enter a home in the absence of the owner and steal a weapon for future use. There can be little doubt that a large number of the weapons used in hold-ups have been stolen from private houses by men to whom a single burglary is a mere flea-bite as compared with the armed robbery of a bank.—Montreal Star.

LITERARY CENTENARIES IN 1935

The centenaries of a number of famous literary figures in British history are being celebrated during the present year. Outstanding among them is that of Sir Thomas More, who was beheaded in 1535. More's claim to fame is vested in his "Utopia", a vision of a perfect world which many people have been hearing about of late. He stood for justice, enlightenment, religious toleration, social and political order of the most advanced character. Another figure of the Renaissance period whose name will be recalled to public notice is Sir Thomas North, the famous translator of Plutarch's "Lives", an Elizabethan classic which provided the inspiration for three of Shakespeare's plays.

Border literature is represented by James Hogg, "the ettrick shepherd," regarded justly as the foremost peasant poet Scotland has produced after Burns. There are poems of his that rank as long as the famous one—"Kilmeny", "When the Kye Comes Hame" and "The Witch of Fire." Another poet who will be honoured is Mrs. Hemans, who, though by no means a poet of the first class, wrote a great deal of popular verse and left some poems that have endured for a century and are still to be found in nearly every popular anthology.

Journalism is honoured in the observance of the centenary of William Cobbett, who was in his day the first generation the best known man in England, a typical John Bull who exercised a tremendous influence over the political thought of his time, and who was one of the most prolific of English essayists.

One more centenary—that of the birth of Mark Twain—will be observed around the world; for Twain belongs, not to America alone, but to all humanity, and his famous stories are still read and relished wherever the English language is spoken and in many countries which have translated them into other tongues. He of all modern writers is assured immortality. —Montreal Star.

BACH OR SAUSAGES

Dame Sybil Thorndike, in criticizing movies and radio, stated that she went into a restaurant in Leeds, England, while Bach was being played, but, instead of listening in reverence, the people present went on eating sausages and clattering dishes. This seems to prove that the ordinary person who goes to a restaurant thinks of eating first, and to the exclusion of everything else until hunger is appeased. What can one expect of people nowadays? It is possible that the Leeds diners might have brightened up if the orchestra had changed to "The daring young man on the flying trapeze," or that famous old English ditty, "Won't you come home, Bill Bailey?"—Montreal Gazette.

Another distinguished Japanese citizen has been attacked by a young fanatic with a knife. It must be said in behalf of a good many Japanese patriots that they are no harder on China than on their own Prime Ministers and business leaders.

Premier Flandin, who is engaged in building up an NRA for his nation, might pick up some good used parts in excellent conditions by shopping around a bit.

WINTER SUNSHINE

With pallid touch the winter sunshine falls
Across the lawn
And lightly gilds the time-stained garden walls
It wanders on.

In this kind land sometimes mid-winter sends
Such rays of sun
To hint of ardor that the summer lends
When Earth's tides run

Brimmed up through veins of every leaf and bud,
When breathing things
Feel all the force of being's rising flood
Which in them sings.

It is a day as fair as memory
Of youth by age,
As glad as any lyric hour will be
On spring's bright page!

MARTIN JOHNSON and his wife Osa, live a life of adventure. They are big game hunters, but they hunt with cameras instead of guns, and their adventures are seeking to take the pictures of strange animals and stranger men rather than their lives. They live in Africa when at home, at a quaint and romantic spot called Nairobi, where they have a bungalow, and any number of dusky servants, and animal pets. Most of the time the Johnsons are on "safari", which means that they are penetrating jungles or crossing wide, waterless plains, or climbing mountains, just to get pictures of humans and animals, moving pictures for the edification of the cinema public. Both Martin and Osa can shoot sharp and true with their sporting rifles which are carried "just in case". Martin and Osa Johnson have many exciting adventures with savage animals and sometimes more savage men. MACHINE GUNS were not considered of much account by the British War Office before the Great War, according to Lloyd George, who tells in four volumes how the War could have been ended in two years or avoided altogether. Germany, of course knew all about the deadly efficiency of machine guns in mass men fighting and also that high explosives would displace shrapnel in modern warfare so far in advance of actual outbreak of hostilities that new and modern warfare was planned and the Allies had to adapt themselves to the German model or pass completely out of the picture—but the cost in lives was terrific.

FOUR MEN SHOT TO DEATH, another bayoneted down in Tennessee, and a negro sentenced to death, resulted from the negro's attack on a white girl. The men met death trying to take the negro from jail in order to lynch him. Discouraging mobs to the extent of firing on them when the life of a negro is involved is something new for the South, where negro lives heretofore have not been considered as worth very much.

LONDON TECS IN TWO TIES

Had Chance by Winning of Colonels at Detroit at Top

By The Canadian Press

Youthful Red Cook, a younger brother of Goldberg New York Rangers star, Bill, and Hank Goldup boosted the only point of second international ice league game and that succeeded to anything in the team standings.

The contest on Saturday night had the Cleveland Falcons a 1-0 win over Detroit Olympics, the Buffalo Bisons a 2-2 tie with Syracuse Stars and Bill Cunningham both get assists on the play, that put Cleveland in a tie with the Falcons, London and Buffalo.

For London Tuesday it was a poor weekend. They played two games and had the opportunity to overtake Detroit, first on top of the loop by taking them both. The first game ended in a scoreless deadlock, played on ice soft and the players could not get going, the contest ended 2-2.

Hank Goldup, brother of the Rangers star, was the marksman against Buffalo. He neatly handled Cunningham's pass, scoring the only counter was called on to stop only 34.

At Syracuse the Stars got away to a flying start when Al Shaughnessy scored 37 minutes after the game was started. Less than a minute later Mick Mats managed in a second Star tally and completed the scoring for the period. Buffalo failed to hold at four.

Mid-ice through the third period though, Bill Roapley scored for London and Speedy Cook got the second counter. Lever getting assists on both plays. The overtime period was on, no points given for the game the match was a fruitless effort as Referee Zeffering the first and manager used the timekeeper.

The Cleveland-Detroit game ended in wild scramble, with Bill Cunningham and Cookie Cook of the Olympics and Ching Johnson and Bill Regan of the Falcons all the hard goal and players of both teams joined the slugging match. Police were called and escorted players to their dressing rooms.

LOOP PLAYOFFS ARENA TONIGHT

Second Game of Semi-Final Round Ordered Played

With the various teams in the local city league scrambling over the week-end to get in the last of games should be played, President Gus Rollins announced yesterday, that the semi-finals in the city league would commence tonight at the Arena. The opening game will get under the Alemite system the R. K. A. C. and the Grills' Garage will go with the Trenton entry. In each case the former teams have emerged as victors in the semi-finals over the latter named club.

The opening over the playing dates some when Grills' A. C. arranged to meet Trenton, was decided to play in the Central loop on Tuesday night, while the Stewart Warners, who had been scheduled for a Monday night assignment exchanged to a Saturday. On the other hand the Trenton team requested to play on Tuesday night, owing to bowling in their own town league, the majority of the Trenton players are members of one or more town league clubs. After considering the matter the Alemite Building announced, that the semi-finals would conclude tonight, but if the Trenton team cannot put in every evening the Grills' lost, that will be scheduled to be played on Tuesday or Thursday.

In the event of the city league semi-finals the Alemites emerge as the victors over the R. K. A. C. by virtue of a 2 to 1 victory in one of the games, the winners of the series. Not to be out-done Walker Grills' "Mechanics" stepped into the Trenton entry and handed them a 3 to 2 reverse in a game, that proved most thrilling. These city league games are attracting more attention as the season advances and a goodly crowd can be expected to be

Alley Bowling Claims Loyalty From Legion of Sport Addicts

By HARRY RANDALL
Central Press Canadian Correspondent

Winnipeg, Feb. 23—Ten million men and women are bowling a strike But not the industrial kind.

Those ten million people represent a new, scientific, game of ball bowlers on the North American continent, who spend many of their recreational hours toppling the "wooden men" with vulcanite balls on alley alleyways.

The origin of bowling is lost in the mists of time, but it probably originated as early as A.D. 400. Pin bowling began with the Dutch, and is the favorite sport of the people of the Netherlands and France who called it "Carrera," meaning "A Alone."

Edward the Third of England, alarmed because the youths of his time were forsaking archery practice to play at "bowles" and parliament pass an act, making it unlawful for the common folk, and confining its joys to royalty.

Alleys were first placed inside buildings somewhere around 1850 but by around 1850, the game had languished somewhat, for in high scores which were easily made with large pins, but eventually, measurements of alleys and alley beds were changed and standardized. Modern bowlers came with their vast array of shining alleys, and round five feet from the ball. It is the cry from the game as played by our forefathers. To-day, men and women flock in mixed leagues and even with man and wife playing together, there is not the bickering and shin-kicking that goes with a session of bridge.

Tournaments Popular

Toronto has rapidly forged to the front as the mecca for devotees of the five-pin game, and thousands of entries are received each year for the Canadian bowling Association's annual tournament, held the first week in April. This year's tourney will be the ninth, Winnipeg's monster ten pin tournament, which draws teams of bowlers from many parts of the west, including Regina and Calgary, and from Minneapolis, St. Paul and Fargo in the United States, the largest of its kind in Canada.

In the United States, bowlers are governed by the "A.B.C." the first three letters of the alphabet stand for American Bowling Congress, and their huge country-wide tournament, is really the "world-series" or "Stanley Cup final" of its kind. This year the tourney convenes at Syracuse, New York, and with bowlerdoms generally reporting better conditions, should draw an entry of 2,000 for the team events alone.

The aim and hope of every ten pin bowler is a perfect game, or 300; just as the five -pin player dreams of rolling at 50 string. Joe Falcaro, known as "Chesty Joe", has chalked up 30 perfect games, and is the world's undefeated match game champion. Another troupe of bowlers is attracting wide attention on their tour of American cities. Followers of the pastime flock to see Otto Stein, Jr., of St. Louis, men's champion; Mrs. Wanne Sells and alley beds were changed and standardized. CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

After some considerable discussion in which every team concerned managed to state as hard as possible for the city league executive in the matter of the semi-final playoffs, President Rollins announced on Saturday that the second game of the play-downs would be played at the arena this evening Trenton wanted to play town league at home and wanted to play tomorrow, Grills were scheduled to play Central League hockey Tuesday while up at the Alemite they are opening a three-day convention tomorrow, so it left the S.R.A.C. kids as the only team left to have a kick. At any rate Alemite and S.R.A.C. clash this evening with the former enjoying a one-goal advantage. No mention of playing to a finish in those games has been made, however, but in case of a tie on the round tonight, it is quite likely that President Rollins will order the games played to a finish, as the league finals are scheduled for next week. The semi-final nightcap affair sees Grills carry a one-goal lead into battle versus the Trenton squad.

When the local city hockey league was organized last fall, a suggestion was made that a trophy be awarded to reorganize the old Belleville post-league play-offs for the Burrows and Robertson trophy —the Revenue Trophy going to the city league winners. The idea mooted was to have the winners of the Belleville League, the Trenton town loop, the Prince Edward County league and the local association series. The four leagues were invited to send their respective champs to Belleville to compete in this gala hockey "round-up". The idea is an excellent one and could be completed in two nights, having the four winners battle it out, in two games, on one set date and the two ultimate winners to meet on Belleville ice for the Belleville and District championship. The four leagues mentioned the winners of the Trenton town league would have a distinct weak sister in such a play-off arrangement. In order to rectify this and to make the series more the winner of the Trenton loop should be asked to draft six players needed, but only from other town leagues, not Trenton. The matter should be attended to immediately, if the series is to be played.

Local hockey lovers to take in the Peterboro at Campbellford game on Friday night returned home singing praises of Bill Cahalline. The local contingent assured us that Cahalline has never been seen at a better advantage this year, he being given the puck time he works and coming back for more to star. We must give credit where credit is due and as Willy goes, so goes the Petes, and they won. Incidentally we understand that the Ingram brothers, Harry and Fred, were fair fellow form, with Fred playing a rather nonchalant brand of hockey all evening. Other hockey enthusiasts inform us that the "star money" was on the Petes for a sure thing. So what? Naturally the management of the Belleville arena was pulling hard for the Maroons to come through and simply because Manager Jay Perris had previously agreed to play at his O.H.A. playdown games in the local arena, that is if the Maroons had won, you see. (But they didn't.) The same proposition was forwarded to the Niagara juniors for their remaining games. If the Gibbsville juniors should happen to play their remaining games at the local arena, they could be assured of at least 1,000 patrons or more.

There seems to be a slight misunderstanding relating to the championship of the Trenton Valley Intersholastic Hockey Loop. It seems that originally the league was to be composed of three teams, Madoc, Marmora and Tweed. Subsequently two other high school squads threw their lot in with the organization and a new schedule was formed. When the three teamed league was formed it was decided that the first and second placed teams at the end of the regular playing schedule should play off, but, when the loop was raised to a five team loop, nothing was mentioned about a play-off series, so state the league leading Tweed High School pucksters. Leafs, Hawks and Maroons Win and Lose Over Weeke While Canadiens Cinch Be

FIGHT AT DETROIT

Boston and Rangers Play Scoreless Draw at New York

They say National League hockey teams that play two games in two nights figure themselves lucky if they can break even and collect a couple of points. If that's so, Toronto Leafs, Chicago and Montreal Maroons should be content today for all three of them won and lost in week-end engagements.

After bashing Chicago 4-1 in a game at Toronto that was played without a penalty being called, the Leafs went on to Detroit and bowed before the Red Wings last night 4-2.

Chicago took their hashing in Toronto and hustled home in time to meet up with Maroons and hand Tommy Gorman's team a 6-1 trouncing. Maroons had shut out St. Louis Eagles 4-0 in St. Louis Saturday night, after which Canadiens hit eighth period game of the season in the Maroon nets.

The other Montreal team, Canadiens, stayed at home and beat New York Americans 4-3 Saturday night. Boston Bruins and Rangers played a scoreless affair at New York last night in the sixth game of the week-end.

The Chicago-Toronto game was the first scheduled encounter the pros have ever played in Toronto without a penalty. It was also the shortest game on record and there were fewer stops in play than in any previous game. The elapsed time was one hour, thirty-seven minutes.

Bill Thoms was the hero of the night, scoring one Toronto goal and assisting in two others. Bill Hollett, Hec Kilrea and Charlie Conacher also scored for Toronto and Howie Morenz got the Hawk counter.

In contrast to the clean Toronto game was the affair Leafs and Wings staged in Detroit last night. There was a wild free-for-all in the third period. Lorne Duguid and Pep Kelly started it with a fist fight and Harold Cotton and Scotty Bowman bringing it to a climax by falling to the ice in a tangle and taking the officials, Red Storey and Russ Dangerously with them.

Major Penalties At Detroit.

Colton, Bowman and Duguid all got major penalties. Two first period goals by Larry Aurie and another by Johnny Sorrell in the second gave the Wings a lead Toronto never could overcome. Joe Primeau and Charlie Conacher made it close with their third period goal when Ebbie Goodfellow scored Hawk's fourth. The Leafs were defeated.

Art Coulter and Baldy Northcott split Eddie Isle Isle, Chicago last night and each was a major penalty. Hawks went the rest of the way before the Maroons got center in the lists in the second and banged in three more before the third period.

Paul Thompson, Leafs' rookie Alex Levinsky and Tommy Cook were the Chicago scorers and Couture each getting one. Herbie Cain banged in Montreal counter.

Alex Connell played terrific for St. Louis to earn his shut-out and stay out in front of the Maroons king. Jimmy Ward got two goals and Ching Johnson and Cain the others.

Canadiens' 4-3 win over Rangers practically assured the Tricolors of the third play-off spot in the International section. Americans got out in front with Cain's goal in the first period, but that sent goals flying from the sticks of Pete Lepine, Lesley Bourne and Johnny Gagnon for Manitaa In the second period Canadiens flew game. Bourne got the second American marker in the second of the season. New York, 15,308 fans saw the scoreless game in New York last night. Both teams played close checking hockey and refused to be drawn by opening up the game. Dave Kerr, Ranger netminder, stopped 46 shots.

KEEPING GOALIE FROM BLOCKING A SH

With excitement at its height in the International match between England and Ireland, played at Liverpool, an English forward makes a play to beat the sterling Irish defence by charging the Irish goalkeeper, England won 2 to 1, in a hard-fought battle. The former can be seen seeking to deflect the goalie from punching the ball clear.

Church Universal is Theme Of Bishop at Confirmation

Church of Future is Theme at St. Thomas Confirmation

"Men have come to the opinion that ultimately the form of Christianity which will grip the world and bring leadership of the Christian forces and solution to our problems will be a liberal evangelical Catholicism," affirmed the Right Rev. Dr. John Lyons, Bishop of Ontario, in his sermon at St. Thomas Anglican Church on Sunday morning at which he confirmed sixteen candidates, seven boys and nine girls and women into the full membership of the church.

Bishop Lyons was preaching on the heritage, the words "Yea, I have a goodly heritage" being the text chosen from Psalm 16.

"Possibly the historic creeds of the church have been as often perverted by us as they should have been for they have come to us as the heritage held we are accustomed to these," said his Lordship. "We have grown set and heard the historic creeds ridiculed and yet the world seems to me as if the people are beginning to realize the value in the Christian Church and in the creeds—the affirmations of the church. 'I believe in God the Father.' 'I believe in God the Son.' 'I believe in God the Holy Spirit' and 'I believe in the Holy Catholic Church'—these four, belief in God the Father, faith in Jesus as Redeemer and Savior, confidence in the Holy Spirit's guidance and in relation with the Holy Catholic Church—they not touch us?

Use of Word Catholic

The Bishop turned to ask if the church was occupying the place it should in the lives of people. Were it not for the church, he believed, there would be no place for men to commune. After twenty centuries of influence working against her, the church was never so looked to as today and never was the church so influential as today. Present day facts are bringing us to have to face the fact of the value of the church, the Bishop declared.

Dr. Lyons claimed that the church was entitled to the use of the word "Catholic." That word Catholic means universal, he explained, "It is the grandest word in the church. It means the universal church. You cannot change it. Our church was founded by Jesus and think of the church without thinking of His Master is impossible. The word Catholic is something we should value. In the days of the church's birth it was understanding of the word 'Catholic'. We might thank God there is such a church in the Protestant Episcopal and spent a day with Mrs. Anglican Communion which is as well as Catholic and yet I believe Church of England, for as a matter Protestantism is included in the word 'Catholic'.

"There is no opposition in the two words.

"Men are looking to the future and studying the future of the world in the light of the present day problems. How is the church going to reach its goal if we move backward to the time when we did not have come to the opinion that ultimately the form of Christianity which will grip the world and give leadership to the Christian forces and offer solutions of our problems will be a liberal evangelical Catholicism, a wide term and yet a term which the noblest men and those overcoming the divisions of the schools of thought. I do not care what part of the church you belong to, I think these two will be the form of Christianity that the future world will include each and every one of us.

Protestantism More Than Protest

"There has been a tendency to look upon Protestantism as protesting against certain rules and teaching. That is merely negative. There is a positive side somewhere. To my mind there is not much Christianity in that. The early Protestants were men and women who witnessed to the truth by their deeds and their lives. Their story rose up and proclaimed truths that might be overlooked. Do you suppose that it moment that Protestantism is going to die out? Do you suppose that Protestant Catholicism is going to die out? No, the Protestantism of the Catholicism of the Church of England is not going to. Both Protestantism and Catholicism have made contributions to the progress of the world and I believe it has been in God's plan. We will gladly be brought to one mind in the matter of creeds.

"It may be remote today, it may be far in the future but it is going to be in the future nearer if we fully realize the universality of church bond as set.

Clark Gable, Joan Crawford and Robert Montgomery in the rollicking romantic comedy "Forsaking All Others" coming to the Belle Wednesday.

Church Consciousness

"I appeal for a great church consciousness. It is no day for petty differences. The tasks facing us are so momentous, that we must pray as members of the mystical Body of Christ's Church."

Bishop Lyons told the confirmation class that their baptism brought them into the Church of Christ, the Holy Catholic Church of which the Church of England is a part. Some were baptized into a larger body than the Church of England, the Church Catholic of Christ, by sprinkling or immersion. Others were taught by the Church of England. That is the reason why people validly baptized in other communions are not asked by us to be re-baptized when they seek membership into the Church of England.

The bishop pointed out that confirmation was the practice in the Church of England, in the Holy Catholic Church, for the practice had dated from apostolic times 50 when the Church of England came into being and that John the Church of England, that he or she be confirmed by the bishop. There is a vital truth in the confirmation rite as practised all through the ages in the Church of God. The Church of England accepts confirmation performed in any other communion and does not ask re-confirmation. The bishop laid confirmation brings out the catholicity of the church.

The scene was most impressive in St. Thomas' on Sunday morning. On the altar were lighted candles, boiled the Light of the World burning while at the rear of the church against the reredos were the cross and lilies. Confirmation candidates had taken their places in the seats reserved. The light through the stained windows, the procession led by the crucifer, followed by the vestry, the wardens, the Rev. A. E. Beauchamp Payne, Bishop Lyons and the Rev. B. F. Dyers as bishop's chaplain, and the choir must have created a scene and sense of devotion impressive to all present.

The hymns sung were "Fight the Good Fight," "Guide Me, O Thou Great Jehovah," "O Jesus I Have Promised" and "Who is on the Lord's Side." During the rite of confirmation, the choir and congregation sang a devotional hymn.

FIRESIDE HOUR AT BAPTIST CHURCH

The first fireside hour since before Christmas was held at the Victoria Avenue Baptist Church on Sunday evening after the church service. Mr. Lorne Andrews presided. Many were present and the hour was enjoyed by all.

The service included two vocal solos by Miss Anna Hoyle and Miss Helen Smith.

The meeting of song was concluded by the Rev. Alexander Grant, Sinclair, pastor, who led in prayer.

Indulge A Homesick Child

By LISA GRENELLE

It was very different at Aunt Laura's—everything, everybody. Even Mirn could never belong here, she felt at once, not after mother and the cozy little house at Points Peak. Jack and Mary, her cousins, weren't much help, either, friendly enough, but they felt Evelyn was an intruder, cousin or no cousin. And Aunt Laura's welcome didn't seem to have the ring of sincerity. Aunt Laura, Evelyn thought, must have a lot of other things on her mind.

The cold, penetrating, bottomless desolation of homesickness sank deep into Evelyn's soul. Mother seemed as far away and lost as if she were already in heaven. Evelyn had never felt like this before, pain, despair too absolute for tears or expression even if there had been someone to express it to, which, of course, there wasn't. Evelyn sat on a corner of the spare bed in Mary's room—dejected to her toe and looked about her—nothing, nothing that could ever belong to her. And then in the corner of her suitcase she found warmth and comfort and friendliness.

A Touch of Home

She had forgotten all about them, those lovely hair ribbons, every color of the rainbow. Now she and mother had bought the day before she left with such gay abandon, more hair ribbons than Evelyn had ever possessed. "Well I have a yard of each," mother had told the clerk. She could hear her say it now with that warm note in her voice. ... ...fully she laid the ribbons out on the bed, green, yellow, blue, red green. She would wear the gre... one tonight and the green tomorrow and—

Aunt Laura had a phobia against hair ribbons. She liked little girls she didn't want to hurt Evelyn's feelings, but Evelyn's sister let it appear before the family in such a costume.

Evelyn at first refused to change She backed against the wall like a cornered animal and kept repeating over and over, "my mother bought it for me, Aunt Laura." But in the end she had to give in. Aunt Laura went out and bought her suitable dresses and a hat, and Evelyn from that day nursed a bitter hatred for Aunt Laura that nothing could dispel.

Indulge Ch... Whims

We have no quarrel with Aunt Laura's taste, conservative and sound without doubt. And, strangely it might have been possible to bring Evelyn around at least partially to co-operate in it.

But to rob her that very first evening of her only contact with home; to criticize her mother's taste at once, were as brutal and as where ever perpetrated by a tactful and well meaning woman.

If Evelyn had been allowed to wear her hair ribbons, at least for the first week or so, if Aunt Laura had admired them even, realizing their significance, Evelyn's pain might have been very different. Her feeling for Aunt Laura might have developed differently.

Fashion Flashes

Make your own ensemble for informal wear. One smart girl wears a sweater of wool, heavily shot with gold thread, with her crepe or velvet evening skirts. The sweater reaches to the hipline and is tied with gold cord and tassels at the neckline.

Never before have suits been so popular. A suit that can be worn on all but the coldest days is of first importance among a name card with the new address of the married couple? If the former, how should it read?

G.

1. You might in this case, have two cards with the bride's table', which would include the bride, groom, and their attendants, and the other for parents of the bride and of the groom, and the other guests.

If you have a bride's table, the bride and groom sit side by side in the head of the table, the bride on the right of the groom. At the bride's table, the bride sits next on the groom's left is the maid of honor. The groomsman sits next to the bridesmaid, alternately, woman and man, as at any dinner.

If you wish to combine the tables, you might arrange to have the bride's table, with the bride and groom sitting together, the bride on the right of the groom, and the other tables arranged as I have indicated for the bride's table. At the other end of the table might be the bride's mother, and the bride's father at the left hand end of the sides of the table, with the groom's mother on the right. This would be one of the suitable places of honor.

3. It is always more convenient to use place cards for such an occasion, since then you can make out the seating arrangements, and this can all be done beforehand. And the seating is so important.

4. Usually there are both the bride's cake for the central decoration of the bride's table, and the individual favor cake for some entrs of the occasion. But you may omit the favor cakes, if you wish, entirely. The boxes of cake would, I think, be less missed, for the guests have already had such a festive part of the event.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

How About These Luncheons Dear Miss Fairfax:

For a little over a year I have been enjoying the friendship of a girl whom I met in a business way. I have been seeing her once or twice a month for lunch. Our friendship has been the finest thing I have ever known. We have never spoken a word about love nor have I even so much as held her hand. This may seem funny, but I should have told you at first that I am married, very happy, and in love with my wife. This girl is also engaged to a young man.

Our meeting each other is, of course, a secret, and that's what bothers me. This girl is not the type who would go with a married man. It was understood from the beginning that our seeing each other was to be friendship only and nothing else, and it has always been just that.

I am convinced if I were to say one word of love she would never see me again, and that's why I like her so much. What I should like to know is, do you think there is anything wrong with a friendship of this kind?

J. S.

You bring up the old question of platonic friendships, over which the world has been growing gray for centuries. Platonic friendships are possible, of course. History records many such instances. The ability to keep them platonic is largely a question of age and temperament.

When young people find what they regard as congenial friendship so agreeable, it is not unlikely that it will ripen into a love affair. That's always the danger.

You say that your meeting is, of course, a secret, and that's what bothers you, Isn't that, in itself, a danger signal.

Won't Tell Him She Loves Him Dear Miss Fairfax:

What puzzles me is that she never tells me that she loves me, but she does tell her sister, and her sister tells me. I don't like to roundabout lovemaking a little bit. Why doesn't she tell me she loves me instead of telling her sister? She lets me put my arms around her occasionally, and she has given me a ring from me. Yet, when I ask her if she loves me, she just looked like butter wouldn't melt in her mouth.

William.

This young lady of yours probably knows how to handle men, and is opposed to giving herself away. But as she likes you put your arm around her and has taken a ring from you, really, I don't see what you have to worry about.

He Took Someone Else to the Party Dear Miss Fairfax:

He told me that if I wouldn't go to the party with him, he wouldn't take anybody else. But Mama wouldn't let me go to the party. She said I was too young and I found out that he did take someone else, and that they had a very fine dancing together the most all evening. And now I'm angry with him.

We're in some of the same classes in high school and I hardly spoken to him since, as he broke his word to me by taking another girl to the party. I still like him a lot, but I intend to stay "mad". Don't you think I'm right?

B ernice

In staying "mad" with someone you care a great deal about, my dear girl, it's always a question if you are not punishing yourself more than you are the person with whom you are mad. In your place, I believe I'd forgive the young man for the "crime" of taking the other girl to the party.

"FLAT-TIRE" or "FAST"

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Why do young men consider a girl a flat-tire if she doesn't dance and a fast one if she does And how can a girl lead her own social life in this age, unless she leads a pretty lonely one? I am 21, and haven't met a man yet to whom I have no intention of leading a say life just to be popular.

I am a prude, and I enjoy the company of men. I like spooning and am an all-round good fellow up to a certain limit—and then I succeed in being cold and a heart-breaker. The intentions of some of these men are honorable, and they suggest an engagement and marriage, but I have not yet met the right man.

How should a girl act to retain the friendship and respect of young men, all good pals? This has puzzled me for many a weary month.

C. E.

I'm thinking of a very charming girl, now happily married, who told me she never had "spooning platform" plain in the beginning of friendships. The young lady drove her own car splendidly. She could out-swim, out-ride and walk most many boys, and as she was very pretty, she made her own rules.

Like you, she was opposed to petting until the right man came along, and in a good-humored way, without a touch of prudery, she set it plain that any sister admirers that she wasn't like an "old flame" who had picked up to be returned dog-eared, thumb-marked." And she got away with it.

"non-petting party," too, until she married a certain college professor and so far they are rediantly happy.

FAMILY WEDDING

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. We are having a family wedding, after which a wedding breakfast will be served at noon in a hotel. There will be about twenty guests. Should the entire wedding party be seated at the table? If so, what are their positions in relation to the bride and groom?

2. Should there be a large wedding cake, cut by the bride, or individual pieces in boxes at each place for souvenirs?

3. The wedding is to take place in the afternoon. Is such a case do all the members of the party stand?

4. Is it proper to enclose an "At Home" card with the wedding announcement, or should a name card with the new address of the married couple? If the former, how should it read?

Tailored Coiffure Is Best For the Business Girl

(The Beauty Box)

Smart coiffure enhances her beauty

By HELEN FOLLETT

Wise is the business girl who sticks to the tailored coiffure. She has only herself to think about as she prinks as the rest are now.

She may permit herself the luxury of a few short ringlets, but she sees to it that they manage to be in the same line. A curl that has lost heart and strung out is a thing that can wear on a scolding tick. It is untidy and there is no health in it.

The tailored coiffure with its flattery plumes about the head is only for that other type of girl who has plenty of time to put her hirsute halo in order. It requires more care than a new baby. It must be housed in a high crowned hat if it is to look right.

She who would be modish, has her patent hair pressed into the becamier effect, can buy puffs and curls. It was said that consumptive girls would never be worn again. Foolish one to predict anything about the whims of fashion! They always play another farewell engagement.

Hair dressers are giving special cuts and trims to suit the high coiffure. They acknowledge that the style is difficult to arrange each day, wonder how long it will survive? Lovely with the brocaded evening costumes, full skirts, quaint fur necklaces and all the other sartorial fixings snatched from the pertod of good Queen Bess.

The uplifted hair dress has brought combs back into favor. Good hirsute plumes won't stay put just with hairpins.

Calluses on the soles of the feet and the outer side of the big toes should be massaged every night with mineral oil. In the morning, soak the feet in warm soap suds and, while the flesh is still pink and tender, rub vigorously with the flat side of a toilet pumice stone. Using sharp instruments on corns and calluses is a hazardous pastime, often leads to serious infections.

Don't envy the men their comfy wrap-around coats, for now so many women can have them. IN SUICIDE 'PLANE LEAP

Girls Visualize Their Suicides As 'Pretty Straight' Corridor to Dead Men They Loved, Say Letters

By GAYLE TALBOT
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Romford, Eng., Feb. 25 (AP)—Elizabeth Jane Du Bois, 20, who plunged from an aeroplane to death last week, visualized their suicides as a "pretty straight" corridor to the dead men they loved.

Coroner's jury today returned a joint verdict of "suicide while of unsound mind" after it had heard the contents of two letters, which the girls had intended only for their fathers, Coert Du Bois, United States Consul General in Naples, and their mother.

The father, tight-lipped and white-knuckled, attended the inquest. The mother stayed at rooms at a hotel, still unaware of the complete details of her daughters' plunge from a commercial transport ship.

In their letters, the two girls told of their grief for the deaths of Flying Officer John A. C. Forbes and Flight Lieutenant Henry R. Beatty, killed at Meadina, Sicily, two weeks ago, when their Royal Air Force flying boat, "Ace of Diamonds", crashed into a hillside.

Letters Read Palsidly

The letters were read publicly over the protests of Franklin C. Gowen, United States Consul.

Each girl had written alternate paragraphs in the letters, one of which was addressed to the father and the other to the mother.

The letter to Du Bois, beginning "Darling Coert" read:

"We never explained things to you as we should. There's been so much doubt and worry. You've been kind to us and forgiven us and you'll forgive us this as you must feel a little of what we did, when we heard of the flying boat crashing up.

"Do you remember Charles (Flying Officer John A. C. Forbes, one of the two aviators killed in a crash at Meadina), sitting about the corridors? The one before us seems pretty straight. Charles was engaged to another girl and he was going to break it off and we would have been married in the summer probably. There never will be anyone else for me."

"We heard of his death in Paris on Monday. We came on to London the next day, nothing came in the Ritz. We did not want to see anyone. Coert, be another still all your strength. I think she will feel as we do. Look in with you now.

"Hedi and Jane."

The second letter read:

"Mother Darling:

"Do not doubt that we are with you now and always and with great love. Please do not think that we have done anything wicked for we were given proof, that if there is a rule, an exception has been made for us.

"We went to St. Martin's-in-the-Field (a church at the corner of Trafalgar Square) because they were to pray for Charles and Dick during the service. They knew we had not been confirmed but they let us take Communion and be absolved from our sins.

"The lesson was the parable of the laborers in the vineyard. You must have known, when you heard, that the crash in Sicily would pull us over a line which has never been well-enough defined for us.

"I think you knew, that Charles and I were going to spend our lives together and I must keep my part of that bargain. We had spent the day loaded down with half crowns (fifty cent pieces) for the policeman in the Strand Palace. What is left in the bank is all Coert's.

Wills Are Made

"If it is considered ours, it goes to the unemployed at the London Docks (from where the flying boat left for Dundee—hopped off in Singapore) or for Royal Air Force widows. Our bags are at Victoria Station. Our wills (Mrs. George Peirson can be published? (The Peirson's are friends that have probably was a book they had written).

"Darling, there is no one else on earth we can count on to love understand. We are together with you.

"We would like that there be nothing in this letter to hurt. It is only the smaller and unessential realities that do that. Think of us as reunited and happy as we would never have been after our lives become complicated with servants. We loved each and that can never be broken or destroyed.

"You must not be discouraged if there are difficulties. It will pass. This is the greatest trust, which we have ever put in you.

"Forever,

"Hedie and Jane"

The bodies of the two sisters were to be cremated later at Golders Green.

"The Country Chairman" Gives Rogers Mirthful, Human Story of Politics

He's done it again, ladies and gentlemen. The ace male star of the screen gives us another triumphant story.

Your favorite actor can well assure and the other fellows—has turned again to the rural American scene for one of the most humanly mirthful and flavorsome films in years. All of which is but another way of saying that Will Rogers is with us once more, this time in the title role of Paul Flinn's "The County Chairman" which opened before three capacity audiences on Saturday.

"The County Chairman" is a fine and atmospheric screen version of the famous George Ade comedy of the same name, which thirty years ago made the name and fame of Mackiyn Arbuckle as a stage star. It is a swift-moving and entertaining story. But its present producers have been wise enough to retain both the original locale, a small Wyoming town, and the original date the year 1910, as the latter permits the use of the colorful types and local issues of those days, when political campaigns were fierce and frenzied and not just talks by radio.

The star appears as the fire-eating boss of a county, who kisses all the babies, captures all the votes and brings together the estranged young lovers in a scrap however, he's too hot to handle.

There is rare humour and pungency in this screen portrait, a notable addition to the Rogers gallery of recent film, which includes "David Harum;" "Handy Andy" and "Judge Priest."

His supporting cast numbers many players who have been with him in previous successes, among them Evelyn Venable, Kent Taylor, Louise Dresser, Berton Churchill, Frank Melton and Stepin Fetchit.

Others playing important roles in "The County Chairman" are Mickey Rooney, Robert McWade, Charles Middleton, Russell Simpson, William V. Mong, Guy Seabrook and Erville Alderson.

Don't forget—Will wins again with this one; and—if you see it—so do you.

A refreshing comedy treat interspersed with a few musical melodys is revealed in "Three Cheers for Love" presented on the same program with the Belle latest News of the World, and a clever and fast moving Mickey Mouse Cartune appropriately titled "Two Gun Mickey". The outstanding programme will be repeated again tonight and Tuesday, matinee and evening and carries Manager Forhan's personal guarantee to you, the reel entertainment.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Strange Wives"

The High-Jinx Comedy of a Man Who Couldn't Call His Home His Own

Ever since Eve coaxed Adam around the Garden of Eden with that famous apple, women have been unanimously persistent in going after and catching the man they want, it is no different now that it was then, only, perhaps, the methods employed has undergone a change.

In "Strange Wives" now playing at the Capitol theatre June Clayworth is a modern Eve woes after Roger Pryor, tempting him with the purchase of a painting instead of an apple.

Pryor first casts eyes on the lovely Mast Clayworth in a taxicab, of all places! How she got there he doesn't quite know, but it doesn't care, but her persistence ultimately weakens him. When he turns her out of his flat, she pops up again in his office and when he comes out the rear entrance, she turns up again in the apartment of his bachelor apartment at the most inconvenient time!

Pryor finally succumbs to Miss Clayworth's charms and they are married, but their honeymoon heir "bi-jack" him. He becomes the greatest victim of the "Ta-Daw" racket the world has ever known. Only his magnificent resourcefulness saves the situation and indefinitely his romance with the beautiful Miss Clayworth.

Added Attractions

Vince Barnett in "Super Stupid", a comedy that is replete with laughs from beginning to fade-out; an exceptionally interesting colored scenic entitled "Paradise of the Pacific. "Scrappy's Theme Song", an amusing cartoon and a single reel depicting several prominent vaudeville acts complete an outstanding programme.

Du Barry Dinnerware Saucers will be the free gift today and Tuesday only. Shows at 2:30; 7:15; 9:15.

MADOC TALLIES EIGHTH SUCCESS

Defeat Grills' Garage Fourth Time in Season

MADOC—The Madoc Orange and Blacks got a strangle hold on a play-off berth in the Hastings County Hockey League they defeated Grills' Garage of Belleville in Madoc arena Saturday by the score of 5-3. This marks Madoc's fourth win over Belleville and their eighth of the current season.

Henderson, Hulin and Noble turned in good performances for the locals but Alexander proved to be the star of the game. Despite the loss, scoring three of Madoc's goals. For Belleville Davidson starred in an exceptional game while Hap Day was the pick of the forwards.

Akey, Alexander and Embury missed some nice scoring chances. St. Denis was penalized for slashing at Akey. Later Alexander also missed practically sure goals when Davidson cleared from scrambles. Play was fast but the two homesters kept the puck in the Belleville zone most of the time. Alexander opened the scoring when he sank the rebound of Akey's shot, giving the goalie no chance.

A few minutes later Belleville tied up the count when the Madoc defence were drawn out of place and Hap Day scored on a pass from Henry Canning. Henderson carried the puck down but Davidson made a beautiful save. Madoc put on the pressure when Herb Hulin scored for slashing Akey.

Second Period

Shortly after the period opened Jerry Keller put Madoc one up when he tallied to a rebound of Embury's shot from a scramble. Rid-

Open water duck hunters of the upper Mississippi river, one of United States' greatest wild fowl areas, are leading a determined fight to prevent placing a ban on the use of the scull boat by hunters. Stirred by reports that the U. S. biological survey will prohibit the practice, hunters have pictured a scull boat as a sportsmen's paradise and have concerted protest. In the picture a scull boat is pictured.

VERMILYEA JURY RETIRES

man by others during the trip.

Jury Asked Question

When he reached California the caretaker told him some news was "not so bright." He said "Oh, my God." What did he mean by that? Then you have the evidence of the car parked in the garage and the subsequent erasure of the records. Then he made the remark, 'Now no one will know the car was in the garage.' What did he mean by that?

Justice Jeffrey called attention also to the evidence that blood was found on the pants of the blue suit said by the taxi man to have been worn by the "fare" which he identified as accused.

"There are circumstances through which link by link the chain is welded. If men were to be convicted only by an eye witness then few crimes would be punished in this country or any other."

Cell-Mate Referred to.

The Cell-mate, Sullivan, was referred to. "Is there any question of him not telling the truth? You heard the conversation and need I dwell upon this?

"You have Dr. Robertson, who was called as an alienist in this. He told him 'I formulated a plan, and you know what I did.' Are you to take this? Dr. Robertson has said he was insane, but you have found him sane enough to stand trial.

"If there remained a reasonable doubt that Harold Vermilyea did not kill his mother on that night then the jury must find him not guilty. If they have no doubt that he did kill then he is guilty and they would find him guilty unless defense of insanity were established.

Definition of Sanity

The court turned to the definition of sanity.

On a charge of this kind there are three things that must appear. A man may have an imbecility of mind, or a disease of it, but if he knew what he was doing, that he was wrong, then the plea of insanity cannot prevail. If he did not know the nature and quality of the act, then the defence of insanity must prevail. But if he knew the nature of the act, then he is guilty of murder and the defence of insanity cannot prevail. Every one must be presumed to be sane at the time of the doing of the act until it is proved that he is insane.

Reference was made at this point by the court to the earlier life of the accused, the emotional stress and difficulties under which he had been placed during the past several years. It has been said that these letters sent during this period by the accused showed a defined paranoid condition. This is the opinion of medical witnesses.

A man may belong to the paranoid class or the praecox class and yet if he does not come within the definition of the law in this respect he is not insane. Abnormalties do not constitute an insane man.

"Dr. Howland has told you that this man was a paranoid and could work out a clever plan.

Over Evidence Step by Step

If this proves so in this case it points to a cleverly arranged plan. You have the statement of the daughter, that her father had changed considerably lately. He even, it was stated, contemplated suicide. This was not contradicted.

The learned defence counsel said the plan was a fool of a plan, that it might as well have been accompanied by a brass band. Do you believe this?

Step by step the court went over the points taken up by the defense counsel in his summation. "He signed up under assumed names, he was recognized. It may appear that if some part of the plan had not gone wrong he would have gotten back in California. This is all supposing. It has been said, that by reason of the financial stress and perhaps the influence of heredity that insanity was liable to break out. No one knew where, and when the refusal of his mother to give him more money an overburdened mind broke down. It was argued, that he was not in a responsible condition. He has been called a paranoiac, of that I am not just now directly concerned. He must be in the class I have previously spoken of. He told one doctor that there was a conspiracy against him; a paranoiac, if he believes he is a victim of a conspiracy generally vents his wroth on those conspiring against him. There is no evidence of his mother ever conspiring against him.

Doctors' Opinions Viewed

Dr. Armour says he knew the nature and quality of the act. Dr. Mitchell has stated he knew the nature and quality and Dr. Robertson has said "I think I might say he knew the act might be punished but that he believed he was justified."

Comment was made upon statements by Dr. Frankish. Dr. Frankish has said the man knew the nature and quality of the act and he knew it was wrong. Are you satisfied with the statement of Dr. Howland that the man had not appreciated the act and there was no awakening until he changed his plans at Toronto after he had seen a newspaper account of the crime. Dr. Armour's evidence was in accordance with all the other doctors except Dr. Howland. The other doctors all agreed, except on various other points.

They have said this man was justified. They have talked of delusions. What delusions had he?

The court turned to a definition of a delusion: One man believed the other man carried a gun, so he carried one himself, met the former and shot him dead. He believed that the other man was going to shoot him. So he shot in self defense. Assume this man had a delusion of conspiracy; his sanity must go this far, that he did not know the nature or quality of the act at the time of its commission. That is the law as I must give it. A paranoid Dr. Armour has told you never escapes after the act.

Final Instructions

Dr. Mitchell has reported to the government and testified that the accused has not a normal, healthy mind, but not all who possess an unhealthy, abnormal mind are insane.

Dr. Howland is a noted alienist, as well as Doctors Mitchell and Armour. It may be hard to reconcile all the evidence here; then, too, you have the statement of Dr. Robertson. All four of them swear he knew the nature and quality of the act. It is for you to come to the conclusion as to whether he is sane or not. You hear the paranoiac does not escape after the act; this man ran away after the act was committed. I can only request you to use your own common sense in this. The burden is not on the crown to prove him sane, but for the defense to find him insane.

"You had heard the evidence and you have given it very close attention, I say once more, that on the facts of this case you are the sole judge; you must take the law and apply it; if you are sure that the defence have proved him insane then you must so find. Much has been said of the relatives—of the children in California, it is a hard case, but you have sworn to do your duty in this respect.

If there remains a doubt in your mind, give the accused the benefit of it; if there is no doubt, then you must retire and do your duty as you see fit."

COAL ROBBERIES ARE FRUSTRATED

One Man Arrested And Will be Charged With Attempted Theft

Revolver shots rang through the morning air, a wild chase followed across the ice at the bottom of South Front Street and continued up to St. Paul St., before a man giving his name as George Johnson of this city, was arrested by local police Sunday morning and taken into custody. After being taken to the police station and further questioned, Johnson will be charged with the attempted theft of coal from the Schuster Coal Company on Friday next. The arrest culminated an investigation made by local police with P.C. Arnott giving chase, that resulted in the arrest.

Following numerous and continued complaints, that coal thieves were busy in and around the old Schuster dock, the local police were patrolling, that section of the city early Sunday morning, when five or six persons were seen loitering in the vicinity of the Schuster Coal Company yards. When the police car was sighted a shout went up—"beat it, the cops". A general scurry of persons was observed by police, who fired shots into the air with hopes, that the fleeing trespassers would become frightened and stop. Later P. C. Arnott gave chase and arrested the man Johnson on St. Paul St.

Four large sleds all of the homemade variety, were found left abandoned by their owners, one having a bag of coal lodged on it. The coal was left at the coal yards, but the sleds were all taken to the police station and confiscated. Although the majority of the persons seen loitering around the coal yard made a successful escape at the time of the investigation into the continued coal thefts, the majority of those present were recognized by the police. Following the arrest of Johnson, others, believed to have been present, were also questioned by local authorities. Subsequent arrests are expected within the matter of a few hours, police stated today.

Heavy Laden Junk Truck is Struck By Train

Brantford, Ont., Feb. 25 (CP) — Louis Sikenos, 62, of Hamilton was killed instantly and his son Himey Sikenos, 18, died in hospital, following a collision early today of the truck in which they were riding and a Canadian National Railway engine at a crossing at Gainsville, three miles from here. The car was being driven along No. 2 highway while the train piloted by Engineer Albert G. Perry of Brantford was drawing a mixed train from Brantford to Bridgeburg.

Identity of the men was traced through an address "65 Caroline Street, Hamilton," written in chalk on the side of the truck. Mrs. Sikenos, one son and one daughter, all of Hamilton, survive.

SONGSTER BRIGADE CONDUCTS SERVICES

The Sunday services at the Salvation Army Citadel were conducted by the members of the Songster Brigade under the direction of Songster Leader Thomas Adams. The devotional exercises of each service were in turn led by various members and the Bible addresses were delivered by Mrs. Dave Wardle in the morning and by Songster Secretary Eric Naylor in the evening.

Choice vocal arrangements were presented by the Brigade during the morning service. An original Army favorite was chosen "Lord With My All I'd Part" and in the evening the grand old anthem "Jerusalem My Happy Home". A varied program of vocal and instrumental music was rendered in the afternoon.

Captain G. Bloss of Toronto will arrive in the city this afternoon and in addition to conducting special efforts regarding young people's work, will preside over the Songsters Annual Musical Festival in the evening.

POLICE COURT

Due to the absence of court officials attending the current sessions of the Supreme Court, no regular session of police court was held in Belleville today. Walter Coughlin, transient, who was arrested last week on a charge of beating and robbing Arthur Deline, Sidney, found his case further enlarged, when arraigned before Magistrate E. J. Butler K. C. today. Coughlin is still being held in custody. All other police court matters to have been presented today, were enlarged until Friday of this week.

Twenty-one transients adorned the cell block of the local police station over the week end, eight signing the register on Saturday night while 13 put in an appearance in quest of a warm night's lodging on Sunday night. Local police authorities started on their tenth consecutive fire-arm registration booklet today. Following the order-in-council issued by the Federal Government, pertaining to the registration of all revolvers and small pistols in Canada, it is estimated that well over 450 small fire-arms have been registered by the local police since the inception of the card system on Jan. 1st. 1935.

Local police authorities experienced a busy week end investigating motor accidents, break-ins and petty robberies, all of which kept the department quite busy during the past 60 hours.

BAND CONCERT MUCH ENJOYED

The band concert held at the Capitol Theatre, under the sponsorship of the Belleville Municipal Band, was largely attended and thoroughly enjoyed by the citizens last night. A fair sum was realized to purchase new instruments for the band. Besides the many well-rendered band selections special instrumental selections were presented by Messrs. Branscombe, Wardle and Greene. Assisting artists were Messrs. Frank Hitchon, singing "The Wanderer's Song" and Clare Patterson singing the "Open Road." Miss L. Ridley played the accompaniments in both cases. A musical number by Bruce Sills was also highly appreciated.

NINTH BIRTHDAY IS CELEBRATED

Minerva Chapter O.E.S. Was Inaugurated Feb. 23rd, 1926

Friday night Moose Auditorium saw a red letter anniversary for Minerva Chapter, Order of Eastern Star, with Worthy Matron Sister Hyde and Worthy Patron, Brother Coles, in charge, the routine was dispatched in short form.

The varied and unusual programme was convened by immediate P.W.M. Sister Grace Vanner and in charge of all Past Worthy Matrons of 138. Mrs. A. E. Wonnacott was lauded for her splendid work in a campaign, necessitating many telephone calls, late dinners and the ups and downs of "campaigning." As a tangible appreciation she was presented with two dainty boudoir lamps with shades. Taken by surprise, she expressed her thanks to the officers in a happy way.

Acknowledging introductions short speeches were given by Mrs. Barlow, Miss Hallam, Mr. Dobbs, Mr. Barlow and Mr. Stewart. The latter is W. P. of Unity Chapter and President of Matrons' Association of Toronto.

A sparkling program was given by the following: Miss Arbuckle, little Miss Helen Brown (readings), Mrs. Gillett, Mrs. Singer (vocal solos), instrumental numbers by Miss Florence Davis. The encores spoke for themselves.

The real fun began with a spelling contest of ten words, by Mrs. S. McGuire, which was finally won by Miss Irene Hallam.

The contest, "Musical Chairs" followed, with Mrs. Gillett at the piano. One by one dropped conventional dignity when an overzealous claimant for a chair was found seated on the floor, which proves that we are but boys and girls grown tall, for hearts don't change much, after all. Mrs. Garnet Dobbs was the happy winner of this prize.

The next was a contest of celebrities in charge of Miss Farnham and Miss Cowan.

Royalty, historians, politicians, local and otherwise were represented. Blissfully men and women moved around the hall without knowing in whose shoes they stood. Their Majesties reigned, Greta Garbo, Shakespeare, President Roosevelt, Duchess of Kent, and among a host of others walked Pa and Ma Dionne. Mr. Barlow as Eddie Cantor, won the prize.

The final contest was cleverly arranged by Mrs. Backus, in groups of the month representing one's birth. November birthdays won. The beautifully decorated birthday cake of nine candles, crowned with a star, was cut by the 2nd Worthy Matron of 138, Mrs. Backus.

Supper was served and closed with the singing of Auld Lang Syne.

LOVE SCHOOL

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

"I don't want a penny of his," Faith declared. But there was a certain satisfaction in discovering the money waiting as Hunter had promised.

"It makes me feel as if the last thread hadn't snapped between us," she told her friend.

Miss Allen laughed. "Perhaps the announcement is a cat out of a lucky bag," she said. "Stop worrying, child. I'm taking you to tea with one of the dearest boys in the world—a genius. It's the one way I know of bringing him things without offending him. He's frightfully poor."

And that was how Faith met Paul Tuckerman.

She and Mary did their shopping first in Montparnasse, one of the artist quarters of Paris. They bought tea, cream, sugar and an array of the delicious tarts and eclairs for which French pastry shops are famous. It was Faith who suggested flowers—bunches and bunches of moss roses she picked up in one of the bright little cars, along the Boulevard Montparnasse. Hearing about Paul had made her forget her own troubles.

Paul Tuckerman was a young inventor, Mary Allen informed her. All his life he had wanted to go abroad, so when he inherited a bit of money from an aunt, he had come to Paris. The money hadn't lasted long, and now he was stranded with his invention—an airplane motor—near completion, and no means of putting it on the market.

"Paul has never grown up," Miss Allan said to Faith as their taxi wriggled in and out of the narrow shabby streets off the Place Denfert Rochereau, fringing the gayer artist quarter. "I don't think geniuses ever do grow up."

The taxi stopped before a dingy door. Here was poverty that Faith could understand, and from which instinctively, she shrank with the memory of her own pinched childhood. She shivered a little as she followed Mary Allan up five steep flights of stairs in the camp sour old house. New York, Paris, wherever it was, poverty smelt the same! And fear cut sharply into Faith again as she shifted the flowers in her arms so that their fragrance blotted out the reek of cheap cooking in the halls. She could never go back to anything like this, she thought, not even to Miss Prime's flower shop. The smooth feel of wealth had touched her beauty, had enclosed her with a sense of security.

Then Paul Tuckerman opened the door. In the shadeless glare of a large garret, Faith saw two things—the colored blob of a red geranium plant on the window sill, and a slender figure in frayed brown corduroys with red hair tossed back from a thin eager face. He was like a flame, she thought, as he fairly swept them in with the boyish delight of his greeting.

It seemed like no time at all before they were merrily drinking tea from saucerless red and white polka dotted cups. The flowers Faith had brought glowed in cracked goblets and old jars. On the peeling white walls hung drawings of pumps and cylinders at which she stared with respect. And on a crude bench in a corner stood a small model of his airplane motor.

With spring pressing in through open windows, and the young man's brown eyes upon her, the disturbing consciousness of poverty passed from Faith. Paul's eyes were hazel quickened by the red of his unruly hair, as if lights from it were reflected in the clear pupils. His long thin nose was palpitant with life, his lips carefree. And now he was looking at Faith with a fierce sort of rapture.

"I didn't know there was anyone so beautiful," he said to Mary Allan.

Faith couldn't resent his open admiration. It somehow eased the dragging undertow of fear that ran through everything she said and did this day.

"Can't I see her again soon?" Paul appealed to Mary Allan as they were leaving.

"I'd love to," Faith answered for herself, surprised at her instant response to this young man.

But uncertainty crushed down upon her again through the long hours of the night. She tossed on the couch in the studio, staring out at the unfamiliar shapes —the old roof lines, the distant dome against the paling stars. She was glad and afraid of what had happened. Hunter's wife — the mystery girl. His brooding blue eyes, the intense blue of them under the sweeping black of his brows, seemed to burn through her in the quiet dawn. Nothing was left but her longing for him.

"Oh, my dear, I want you so!" she said aloud. "I'll go mad if I don't hear from you soon."

But there was no word the next day or the next. And it was a relief when Paul Tuckerman came to see her. He took her to the Luxembourg Gardens where children romped around fountains, students and lovers strolled under the chestnut trees, and old men played croquet in the shade. Here, a hatless young man in an open throated shirt and baggy trousers, was not conspicuous. And here, on a brown earth plateau among old statues, to the frail tunes of a merry-go-round, Faith found herself talking earnestly of life to Paul.

They leaned against a balustrade next to the wide stone steps leading to the lower garden with its gay flower beds, its round basin with the plumed fountain, the French Senate house on their left, the sun glinting on Paul's red hair.

"I suppose I'm greedy. I want so much," Faith said ,watching little boys sail their boats in the basin below.

"You should have everything." Paul was very emphatic.

Faith sadly shook her head. Oh, if all this wretched publicity hadn't come up; if they had only let her and Hunter alone. "It isn't as easy as all that," she said half to herself. "You get something you want more than anything in all the world, and then everyone tries to take it away from you."

"I know." Paul's hazel eyes with the lights in them, gazed dreamily at the glittering fountain spray. "The point is to have something no one can take away. Something like your name," he continued turning to her. "Faith—what a beautiful name—Faith. Lovers and artists have it. And inventors," he added with a shy smile. "Just believing in what one's doing. Putting one's best in it, you know. And— well, I don't suppose an airplane motor will ever startle the world, but if I contribute something to aviation, to the safety and speed of planes, I'll be a part of progress, you see, and that's worth while."

"You do believe then that things are worth while," Faith mused, thinking with a little pang of Hunter who didn't believe in anything. The war had done that to him, so he he said. Her mind flew back to the terrace of his penthouse that day when they had talked. There was nothing eternal except death he had said—

Paul leaned over to touch her hand very gently "Why are you so sad?" he asked as directly as a child.

Faith's lovely smile flashed from her lips to her grey eyes. "Because I can't have what I want of course," she said.

But it wasn't only that; it was the waiting. There was nothing more in papers, and no sign from Hunter. Even if his influence had been powerful enough to hush further speculation in the papers, he must realize her position. Suppose reporters over here traced her! What should she say or do! She couldn't deny she was Mrs. Hunter Barclay.

To escape her worried thoughts, Faith turned gratefully to Mary Allan and Paul.

Mary had started painting her portrait. Paul took her to museums to hear music, to forests where kings had hunted, and chateau where queens had reigned. He took her to great cathedrals of dusk and incense, to small, bright restaurants on the river Seine where simple people ate fried fish and drank red wine He brought the past in history and art to prance and pace in living colors through the shifting scenes of Paris.

Faith was dazzled, a little bewildered by it all. But as she absorbed new impressions, new ideas, she felt she was catching up with Hunter, who had been everywhere and seen everything. And the ache and longing for him stabbed through her heart.

At the end of the week, Mary Allan gave a party. A friend of hers, Ricardo del Guarrez, was to sing. Faith never forgot that evening. The studio massed with flowers. The long windows open on a warm June sky. The men and women gathered there, speaking every language, dressed in every kind of costume— old sweaters, Russian blouses and sashes, tailored suits, evening gowns. They sat on cushions around the piano, they were clustered on the couch, draped along the narrow balcony railing. The deep, rich voice of del Guarres filled the air with passion.

Faith sat by the window in a carved straight-backed chair. Paul, on a cushion at her feet, whispered adoringly that she looked like a lovely enchanted princess, and that he had fallen in love with her.

There was an April frailty to the ashen tones of her hair misting about the pure oval of her face, the wide grey green of her eyes, her slim young body in white satin. Her lips parted as she listened to the music.

She didn't belong here, either. Faith was thinking with a kind of despair. These people, even Mary and Paul, were interested in things of which she knew nothing. Their lives were full without her.

Next week she must find a place for herself somewhere or else sail back—back— to what? Gertrude Stevens' hostile dark eyes seemed to challenge across space. Gertrude's low, bitter voice saying: "You'll never have him." Gertrude, with her great position, her wealth, her beauty, reaching out her ring, jewelled hand to take what she wanted. And it would have to be a man like Hunter—

Del Guarres sang of love and red roses to the rhythms of Spain. Faith felt tears coming to her eyes.

She hadn't noticed Mary Allan's approach, but suddenly there was Mary bending over her chair, and Mary's low quiet voice: "Someone has come for you, dear."

Faith looked quickly toward the door, and everything else in the room faded. She had a vague, confused sense of pushing Paul aside as she ran toward the tall figure in immaculate evening clothes standing in the doorway.

"Oh, Hunter— Hunter, you've come!" she cried, with [illegible] joy.

A NIGHT OF LOVE

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

"My dear girl—" Hunter's greeting was a low spoken protest against conspicuous rush across the floor. And he stepped back into the tiny hall among a litter of coats and hats.

"Oh, Hunter I'm so glad you've come! I've been miserable." Faith still clung to his arm, but the thrill was passing.

There was no answering warmth in his face as he glanced into the studio at the candles and flowers and the assorted costumes of Mary's guests.

"You seem to have found friends," he drily observed. "I had to do a lot of telephoning before I could root out your address from the bank. I only arrived late this afternoon," he added.

He was more marvellous looking than ever, Faith thought, with a lift at her heart, but his presence somehow crushed and frightened her a little. He was so very grand, so very unlike Mary's friends.

"If I'd only known you were coming," Faith murmured. It sounded silly. The music was over, and shrill gusts of chatter drifted into the hall as the guests gathered around a punch bowl.

"I read about us in the Herald Tribune," Faith hurried on, feeling shy and tongue-tied. "I hope it hasn't—I mean it must have been terrible for you." She wished they could go somewhere else to talk, but there was only Mary's bedroom and the kitchen.

Hunter's black brows met over the deepened blue of his eyes. "I sailed at once," he said. "I was able to hush things up pretty well before I left, but of course——" His gesture expressed a certain helplessness.

Faith's bright head drooped. "What are we going to do?" she asked in a low voice, and her breath seemed to stop while she waited for his answer.

It was a long time in coming. "Everyone wonders where and why I've hidden my wife," he said at last bitterly. "I've got to produce you to stop this confounded talk."

Faith stared at a shabby brown coat hanging on one of the hooks in the stuffy hall, Paul's coat with the broken button and the darn in the sleeve. "I'm afraid I've only been a trouble and disgrace to you," she said sadly.

"It hasn't been your fault, poor child." There was a kinder note in his voice. "As a matter of fact, I've come to ask you a favor," he went on with an air of constraint. "I keep an apartment in Paris, you know. Would you mind living there with me, simply for the sake of appearances, until this business blows over?"

"Of course I will", Faith agreed and felt the rush of color to her cheeks. Not to hide any longer, to be recognized as Hunter's wife, to live under the same roof—oh, what did anything else matter!

"Thank you, my dear," he said. "It seems the only way for the present."

Faith noticed then how haggard he looked. Shadows under the brilliant blue of his eyes, lines tightening around his mouth. He moved restlessly beside her. "I think we'd better be getting on then," he said with a glance of distaste toward the studio.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

"Take your hand off that pistol!" commanded Tarzan. Olga's hand dropped. "Now come here!" As she obeyed, the ape-man hurled her weapon out the window. He saw Karenoff's fear-whitened face and knew that——at last he had found the right man. Now would the death of his mate be partially avenged! "What do you want of me?" demanded the Red. "You are going to pay the price for what you did in my Waziri home," replied Tarzan.

Ivan Karsenoff began to bluster and threaten as Tarzan, locking the door and throwing away the key, said to the girl: "Keep out of the way." Then he started across the room toward the burly Red. Like a cornered rat, Karsenoff prepared——to fight for his life. Lowering his bull head he charged for the ape-man and in the centre of the room the two clinched. A moment they stood locked and swaying until Tarzan succeeded in forcing his antagonist backward. Then—

Little Benny's Note Book

We was eating breakfist and ma said to pop, Willyum you simply must stop in at Berd and Linnits today and get yourself a new suit, that one you have on is axually shiny from the ravages of age.

Nonsehse, what you see is meerly the honest gleem of sattisfaction that comes from the nollege of faithful service well performed, pop said. This suit has stood by me through thick and thin, is this any time to ask for its resignation? he said, and ma said, It's the ideal time if you ask for my unsolicited opinion.

Well suppose you meet me at the office and go with me, pop said. When I wawk into one of those places my mind becomes a blank and anything mite happen to me, he said, and ma said, Now Willyum nothing looks more downtrodden than a man being led into a clothing establishment by his wife. Aren't you old enough and experienced enough to pick out a suit of clothes for yourself and by yourself? she said.

O, I guess so pop said. I think I'll get myself a nice little outfit in discreet checks. A man in a check suit always inspires confidents, and that's logical enough because any man with sufficient confidnets in himself to wear a check suit naturelly inspires the same feeling in others, he said, and ma said, Not in me he doesn't, he meerly inspires a mingled feeling of horrer and consternation. You'll do no such a thing, the ideer such an ideer, she said.

Lets try it and find out, it will be an intristing experiment, pop said and ma said, now Willyum, that subjeck is exhawsted, I'll meet you and go with you if you insist, she said, and pop said, I don't know the more I think of it the more I feel maybe I better go alone.

Then stop thinking of it, ma said, And she met him and took him and pop came home with another blue suit just like the kind he always gets.

GALA CARNIVAL AT SCHOOL RINK

York School Grounds, Picton Parent Colorful Scene

Picton, Feb. 23—The grounds of the York Street School were brilliantly lighted with colored lights on Thursday evening, for an ice carnival, held by the teachers, Miss Bruce Yarwood and Miss Winnifred Wycott. The two hundred pupils of the school attended on skates, and in costume. Besides these, thirty-five guests presented members of the school board, and parents. Everyone skated for half an hour on the large open air rink, and no one knew his neighbor, so disguised were the costumes. Next competition were the costumes. Next competition for best costume, Jack Vesterveit dressed in cream pants, red coat, huge white collar, red bow tie and black derby, acted as master of ceremonies with a megaphone and boys and girls skating races, and mock hockey matches, using brooms and a rugby ball, afforded much amusement. As nine o'clock the tired and hungry youngsters gathered in the lobby of the room and enjoyed a lunch of buns, weiners, cake and cocoa.

Prize winners were:

Pie Eating Contest—Billy Morris, Billy Dunlop, Wallace Bell.

Best Costume, Girls, 6, 7, 8 and 9 years—Peggy Creighton; 10, 11 and 12 years—Marie Ballis.

Skating Races, Boys, 6 and 7 years—Leo Gibbard; 8 and 9 years—Cletus Vesterveit; 10, 11 and 12 years—Geo. Hart.

Prettiest Girl—Shirley Brisbin.

Prettiest Boy—James Thompson.

Best Skating Contest—Mrs. W. Thompson, Mrs. Rawlins.

Judges—Jack Vesterveit, Walter Thompson, Bruce Yarwood.

A group of mothers present assisted with serving the supper. Mr. John Maher and Mr. Harry Hunt, members of the board, commended the teachers and parents warmly on the success of the event.

On Thursday afternoon Mr. Cronk of Wellington lost a valuable team of horses in West Lake. Mr. Cronk was hauling wood with a sleigh and team, from Darrell's Island over the ice to the mainland shore, where Quinte Milk Products plant is situated. The sleigh broke through the ice and Mr. Cronk left the team a few minutes to call help. Returning with men, he found the team in the water. The animals sank before the men could do anything to save them.

At 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon the fire siren summoned firemen and a large gathering of citizens to a bad fire in A. R. Teasel's drug store on Main Street. The fire was of unknown origin, as only a few banked fire burned low in the furnace at the time. The flames were confined to the back shop where supplies, mostly, are stored, and the damage was completely quitted with fire and water. The front of the store, however, escaped in white, was terribly damaged by smoke. Cracking glass and the noise of popping corks had many back from entering the building. The loss is estimated at $2000.00, only partly covered by insurance. Mr. Teasel was in charge of the fire arrangements for the evening. Prize winners were Mrs. Clarke, Pullerits and Mr. Norman Mallett. A delicious supper was served at eleven o'clock at the close of the playing.

Son of Hollywood's social registrites

By RADIE HARRIS
Central Press Canadian Correspondent

Hollywood, Feb. 23—Some 20 odd years ago, when Hollywood was a suburb of Los Angeles and horse-flesh and custard pie were the most essential ingredients of every picture, society circles from Pasadena to Newport turned up their noses on the majority of the screen's heroines.

Back in those swaddling clothes days, when silence still was golden, the dear little actress, when permitted to talk, were prone to commit grievous social errors which fatally barred the humble strata from which they had lately emerged to sudden fame and fortune.

But "tempus fugits" . . . and today, Hollywood boasts a crop of young players whose poise, manner, breeding, intelligence and refinement enable them to equal, if not surpass, most of New York's young debutantes and blades in the matter of social decorum.

John Lodge Arrives

Perhaps the personification of this new social influx is John Lodge, young grandfather, the Cabot Lodge, was U.S. senator from Massachusetts for many years.

Lodge, reared in the true tradition of his ancestor, was graduated from Harvard Law school. Following a year of travel he returned to New York, where he became a member of an "exclusive" legal firm.

Lodge's advent into films was one of those unexpected turns of fate. Now, however, that he has become an actor of such importance that Shirley Temple desired him for her daddy in "The Little Colonel," he has relegated his legal career to the background and is concentrating all his efforts on his screen future.

Another young scion whose name is included in the creme de la creme of the social elect is James Blakely, son of Mrs. Grace Hyde of Park Ave., New York, and Southampton, L. I.

Distasteful Publicity

When Jim first arrived in Hollywood he was "glorified" as Barbara Hutton's former fiance —publicity that was distasteful to him.

Although he and the present Princess Mdivani still are the best of friends he had no desire to capitalize on their close association as a means of bringing him to public attention. He had deserted the social whirl of Mayfair to carve out a career for himself, not for any lark, but with a sincere purpose to make good on his own.

Jane Wyatt and Betty Furness are two other authentic social registerites, who would rather rate attention because of their histrionic ability than because of their distinguished family trees.

The "Real Thing"

Although you would never suspect it from her arrogant mannerisms, Katharine Hepburn is the real thing socially. The daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Thomas Hepburn of Hartford, Conn., and a graduate of Bryn Mawr, she is "to the manner born." An offspring of one of the P.F.V.'s (first families of Virginia to you!) is Margaret Sullivan, daughter of Cornelius and Garland Connell Sullivan of Norfolk, who had Margaret remained in Norfolk instead of running off to the Ruth St. Dennis school in Boston, she might now be leading the conventional life of a true southern belle, instead of being hailed as one of the best young actresses on the screen today.

Although not a social registerite himself, Fred Astaire through his own marriage to Phyllis Potter and through the alliance of his sister, Adele, with the Duke of Cavendish, moves in the upper strata of the most exclusive social circles. His presence in Hollywood now, has added considerable prestige to the "royal families" of filmdom.

Rendezvous of Elite

Richard Barthelmess similarly married into the social register, when he became the happy benedict of Jessica Sargent. They're charming home in Beverley Hills, which reflects the good taste of Cornelia's and is the popular rendezvous of Hollywood's elite.

Time was—and not so very long ago—when there was a distinct barrier between the theatrical and social worlds. Society looking through its diamond-studded lorgnettes frowned supercilliously on anyone connected with so blatant an art as the stage or screen. But the old order changeth!

After careful consideration of the work of the church it was thought that for the good of the community and the church it would be well to organize a women's association to assist with the finances of the church. The motions and unanimous vote Mrs. Ben Morton was elected president, Mrs. Frank Emerson vice president and Mrs. Gill Vanderwater as secretary-treasurer. A delicious lunch was served by the ladies and a social half hour brought a very pleasant and profitable evening to a close.

Royal Marines To Mount Guard At the Palace

By THOMAS T. CHAMPION.

Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Feb. 25—(CP)—A signal honor has been conferred by His Majesty the King on the royal marines. For the first time in their history of 275 years they are to mount guard at Buckingham Palace, St. James' Palace and the Bank of England and the brigade of guards go on manoeuvres in the late summer. The marines, comprising three divisions, are permanently stationed at Chatham, Portsmouth and Plymouth.

"The Royal Marine," says one authority, "is a fully-trained infantry soldier; he is likewise a naval gunner, similar to a bluejacket." Possibly the higher honor, now bestowed after long years, will give him the place in public estimation he deserves.

More than 22 officers and 3,600 men fought gallantly at Trafalgar. The Royal Marines also received the commendation of Field-Marshal Sir William Birdwood for the attack on both sides of the Dardanelles in the Gallipoli campaign during the Great War. They were also at Zebrugge.

'NOTHING TO SAY' SAYS VERMILYEA BEFORE SENTENCE

Assize Judge Urges Condemned Man to Pray For Forgiveness

SPECTATORS EARLY

Special Guard is Placed Upon Prisoner by Gaol Governor

Harold W. Vermilyea was sentenced to be hanged today, on May 2, next by Mr. Justice Hoel Jeffrey at 10.43 o'clock this morning when he appeared for sentence after being found guilty by a jury late last evening for the hatchet slaying of his aged mother in this city on the night of October 4th.

The stoic calm and unconcern that marked Vermilyea, during the past eleven days of his trial here, was still evident today as he stood before the judge and accepted the death sentence. Only a rubbing of hands together and shifting of them from pocket to pocket at the court addressed him, betrayed a slight nervousness in the convicted fell.

Walks Quickly Out

"I have nothing to say", he replied in a clear voice as he stood up and answered the question directed at him by Justice Jeffrey. Vermilyea's usual slightly ashen pallor lightened as he addressed the court. At the end of the sentence, in the hushed silence that followed, he grabbed the air cushion constantly carried by him into court, tucked it under his arm and walked out of the room under close guard, to his cell where he will be kept constantly until the day of execution. On the orders of Governor French, a special guard will be placed in the cell with him from now until the final day.

Sleeps Unbroken

Vermilyea entered court today rested by a sound and unbroken sleep during the night. He had breakfast early and upon the same breakfast served other prisoners in the jail, a breakfast of porridge, milk and bread. His meals from now on will be better than the usual fare.

In passing sentence this morning Mr. Justice Jeffrey thanked Grain Fruit Exchange employes and born resident of this county, Justice Jeffrey said:

The Sentence

"The sentence of the court upon you, Harold Vermilyea, is that you be taken from the place from which you came and kept in safe custody until the second day of May and upon that day you be taken to the place of execution and there hanged by the neck until you are dead.

"And may the Lord have mercy upon your soul."

Jury Rejects Plea of Insanity; Guilt Verdict is Found by Jury; Longest Trial in Hastings Ends

Son of Woman Slain by Hatchet Hears Apparently Unmoved Verdict Condemning Him as Matricide

JUDGE PRAISES JURY'S LOYALTY

No Mercy Recommended in Finding of Jury—Defence Polls Jury on Guilt and Insanity—Sentence Deferred Till This Morning at 10.30

Harold W. Vermilyea was last night found guilty of the murder of Mrs. Tsyear-old mother, Mrs. Aurelia Vermilyea, on the night of October 4th. last with a hatchet. Sentence was deferred until ten-thirty o'clock this morning by Mr. Justice Hoel Jeffrey.

The death sentence under the law is automatic.

Vermilyea's counsel had set up a second line of defence besides the not guilty plea, namely insanity. But the jury found the man not insane at the time of the commission of the crime. The jury's verdict was the single word "guilty." When the presiding judge at the Assize Court received the verdict, he said to Mr. C. A. Payne, K.C., defence counsel, "You know what this means."

The jury had gone out a few minutes after four o'clock, and about four-twenty was called back for the announcement on a few matters which had been brought to the attention of the judge of the assize by the chief counsel for defence, Col. R. H. Greer, K.C. About four-thirty the jury again retired, this time not to emerge from their deliberation room until they had reached a verdict.

Some had thought a verdict likely after two hours but the time wore slowly away. The evening meal of sandwiches and coffee was taken into the jurors. The time dragged on. In the court room crowded with spectators, many of them women, there was quiet. The only conversation as usual in a crowd of several hundred persons. Newspapers were being read, people were moving about.

Shortly after nine o'clock there was a little excitement near the jury room door. Usually the jury when about to enter gives a knock on the door which is audible throughout the courtroom. The sound was heard by many but when the guard inquiring and learning what the jury wished to convey, had the Assistant Sheriff, Mr. Geo. Stokes notified, who left the courtroom to enter the jury room. He came out shortly and it was learned that the jury was ready to report.

Hush Falls on Court Room

A hush fell instantaneously on the crowded hall of justice. There was a murmur of criticism as Vermilyea in a few moments entered the courtroom, proceeded and followed by guards. It was then nine ten o'clock. Taking his seat in the dock, Vermilyea sat in the chair turned to one of the guards and said something to him in a much more cheerful than he had during the long day of addresses to the jury.

The jury took their places. They looked tired but showed traces of paleness. The jurymen looked very grave. Mr. Justice Jeffrey entered. Those in the courtroom rose in recognition of the law, and Vermilyea sprang to his feet, and stood facing the Judge as the crier announced the resumption of the court proceedings.

Verdict 'Guilty'

The registrar, Mr. John O'Flynn asked the jury the name and completing this asked: "Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon your verdict?" The foreman responded in the affirmative.

"Do you find the prisoner at the bar guilty or not guilty?" further inquired the registrar.

"Guilty" was the reply made in a very low tone.

Mr. Payne who was appearing in the defence in the absence of Col. Greer, chief counsel, addressing the court, then asked the jury to ask to have the jury polled on the question of guilt and of Insanity.

The court inquired: "Do you still insist upon the poll on the second count if I and Payne" is polled on the question of guilt?"

"Yes, my lord."

Jury is Polled

The jury was then called by name, and in answer to the question: "Do you find the prisoner guilty?" twelve men answered "yes." Against the aseize registrar interrogated being the one word "guilty" on the question of insanity.

"Have you anything to say, Mr. Vermilyea?" asked the court of the crown prosecutor.

Mr. Payne said it was unusual but he offered no objection.

The question was asked of the prisoner: Do you wish to say anything?" He replied that he did not feel like saying anything. The twelve jurors agreed that the accused was not insane as they were polled.

Vermilyea Did Not Look at Jury

Vermilyea did not look at the jury. He had perhaps a little more color than usual.

"Anything further, Mr. Payne?" asked Mr. Justice Jeffrey.

"Nothing, my lord."

"Mr. Payne," said the Judge. "I move the sentence of the court," the crown said.

"I so move." There are certain matters I would like to discuss with you, Mr. Payne before passing sentence and I will adjourn the court until half past ten Tuesday morning."

Judge's Gratitude

A tribute to the jury was voiced by Mr. Justice Jeffrey. "Gentlemen of the jury, now you have disposed of the case you have listened so carefully to for so long. I do not think a trial has taken place in this county with greater disinterestedness than that in this plague-stricken courthouse. In this plague of influenza, the jury one by one went down but you remained at your post. In the case that had to be laid over it would have meant a great hardship for many of you to be away and I publicly say to you I owe you a debt and I appreciate what you have done. That feeling no doubt will be experienced throughout the county. I thank you most sincerely on many thanks for your devotion to duty. Only once has been one of my lengthest in the county of Hastings.

"I am glad the case is over. I do not like to introduce myself but for a time I did not feel like carrying on myself but it was not for me to shrink or flinch my duty when you as a representative gentlemen I confer on you my grateful thanks. Gentlemen of the jury a great public service."

The judge then remanded the prisoner to jail until ten-thirty this morning for sentence.

Little Reaction

In charge of guards, the convicted man was taken from the room. He carried himself as he walked down the corridor, looking slightly downward and ahead of him. Those in his path made way for him in the corridor, said he showed a sign of biting his lip, but there was no apparent hesitation of reaction except perhaps quite a high color which showed in his face.

Vermilyea had eaten a fairly good evening meal in his cell at the close of the afternoon proceedings. There he remained until he was brought up into the courtroom.

The death sentence is automatic in this case on the finding of "guilty". There was no recommendation to mercy added, the finding being the one word "guilty"

A police cordon was thrown over the surrounding district when a description of the hit and run car was given the police. Later into Toronto motorists, driving a motor car similar to the one alleged to have hit Wood, were apprehended by the local O.P.P. The men were held by the police over night on suspicion, but further check-up by Constable Barrett and Hillyer, O.P.P. of Napanee, revealed that the motorists could not have been the ones implicated and they were allowed their liberty today.

This position will be separate from that of Commissioner of Provincial Police.

Y'S MEN HEAR ELECTRICITY TALK

"The fundamentals of electricity", was the basis of an interesting and educational talk given by G. R. Davis, superintendent of the meter department of the local Hydro Electric Commission's office, to the members of the local Y's Men's Club last evening. Mr. Davis dwelt at length upon the generation and transmission of electricity, explaining clearly to the layman how it was manufactured and distributed. The talk was one of the most pleasing and educational heard by the club this semester and held the attention of the listeners for fully 50 minutes.

Mr. Davis was introduced to the club by Harry Foste and thanked for his educational speech by Secretary Ed. Buchanan. Y'sman Newton Wilbur occupied the chair during the evening and announced, that the club's monthly bridge party would be held next week.

STRIKES HEAD AGAINST FENDER

Kenneth Bunnett, 164 Charles St., suffered several painful face and head lacerations, when he slipped on the icy pavement on Front St., last night and when falling struck the front fender of a passing motor truck. Mr. Bunnett had started to walk across the street and as he stepped from behind a parked car, his foot slipped on the icy pavement, just as a motor truck, driven by A. R. McKenzie of this city, was driving past. Mr. Bunnett fell in the path of the truck, striking his body on the left front fender. Mr. Bunnett was thrown clear of the truck, striking his head on the pavement. Several nasty head and face cuts were sustained by the injured man, necessitating medical attention. Local police investigated the accident.

WINDOW BROKEN AS CARS COLLIDE

Icy pavements are attributed the paramount cause of a motor accident, that ultimately resulted in the large plate glass window in the front of the Walker Store being broken, about 11.60 a.m. today. William Lindsay, Dundas St., was driving an automobile south on Front St. when the vehicle started to skid on the ice. Mr. Lindsay applied the brakes but the automobile swerved slightly to the right, struck a parked car, knocking it across the pavement. The parked car bounded directly into the plate glass window at the front of the Walker Store, shattering it in small pieces. The parked car was later pushed back into position. The accident investigated by local police and found to be purely accidental.

Police News

One even dozen, 12, transients applied at the local police station for a warm night's lodging last night, all departing their various ways early today. A number of minor motor accidents kept the police department busy last night, the most important resulting in a locally driven automobile crashing into the rear end of a city bus at the Victoria Ave.-Front street intersection. The bus had stopped and when a motorist, who was following in the wake of the bus, applied the brakes of his car, the vehicle skidded on the city pavements and crashed into the bus. Both front fenders and one headlight of the car were badly damaged. Local authorities investigated.

'NOTHING TO SAY' SAYS VERMILYEA BEFORE SENTENCE

Justice's Words

Just previous to the passing of sentence, Justice Jeffrey addressed the prisoner as follows:

"Vermilyea, after a fair trial and a long consideration of your case by the jury, they have found you guilty. It would serve no good purpose for me to say anything to you about the nature of the act which you committed. If at the present time you feel no remorse for the commission of the crime, no words of mine can make you appreciate it.

"I do earnestly beseech you to seek the consolation that your religion affords you. It was developed in evidence that you were a good father; you cared for your children and looked after their spiritual welfare. You can ask forgiveness for your sins, and forgiveness will not be denied you."

Court Room Filled

With every available seat in the court room filled long before the opening today, hundreds of curious milled about the front steps of the court house. Some had arrived early, waiting since 6:15 a.m. for the doors to open. Special guards under the direction of Sheriff J. D. O'Flynn, found difficulty in stemming the crush and keeping the corridors clear. In the spectators' rows when finally admitted, many women knitted patiently waiting for proceedings to open.

Vermilyea, in the same chocolate-brown tweed suit, with his close cropped iron grey hair neatly slicked entered as he has entered for the past eleven days of the trial, more composed appearing than the three Provincial Police guards who precede and trail him closely. He entered the prisoner's dock, glanced around at the curious crowd, then seated himself on the air cushion and lolled back at ease, arms on the dock railing.

'Just Like a Drama'

A hush fell over the court room as the prisoner toyed with a match end of a bit of wood, cleaning his will kept nails. Last evening as he re-entered the court room he had been more talkatalye. As he entered the lighted room last night he had remarked in an audible voice which clearly carried to the spectators: "Just like a drama". Today he was apparently not in the mood for talking.

Mr. Justice Jeffrey entered the court room at ten-thirty. He mounted the bench and sat quietly for a moment, rustling some papers. Vermilyea sat down easily as court was officially opened, arms on the railing.

Convicted Man's Inquiry

"Harold Vermilyea, stand up," ordered Justice Jeffrey.

The prisoner stood erect, placed both hands on the railing and faced the court.

"Have you anything to say?" asked the court.

A slight pause, a momentary hesitation and then Vermilyea cleared his throat. "What was that?" he asked. Then a further hesitation .... "Not a thing," he finally replied in a clear tone.

Mr. Justice Jeffrey, turned from his close observation of the prisoner to his desk. A paper rattled slightly, its noise crackling through the electric tension and stillness of the room. The court again glanced at Vermilyea. The prisoner, with hands in pockets, shifting them from time to time to rub them together in slightly nervous fashion, stood with head up, facing the judge. A slight pallor on his features turned a shade whiter. His eyes returned the steady gaze of the court. A spectator in one of the back row benches coughed a bit nervously. Then, in the dramatic stillness of the room, Mr. Justice Jeffrey delivered his address to the prisoner, end with .... you can ask forgiveness for your sins and forgiveness will not be denied...."

Black Cap Not Used

Mr. Justice Jeffrey paused for a moment at the end of the address. Then the death sentence was pronounced. The court did not don the black cap.

"The sentence of the court upon you, Harold Vermilyea is that..... taken to the place from which you came....kept in close confinement.. until the second day of May, and upon which date you be taken to the place of execution and be hanged by the neck until you are dead......

Condemned Man Sways

"And may the Lord have mercy upon your soul"......Slowly and clearly the words were pronounced by the court. At one point as they were recited. Vermilyea, appeared to sway slightly. His hands shifted again from his pockets to the railing in front of him. His eyes appeared to close for a moment and his head bowed slightly. The court concluded. Again a rustle of papers on the bench crackled through the stillness of the court room. The death sentence had been delivered. Vermilyea still stood standing, appearing a bit uncertain of the next move. A guard reached over and touched him on the shoulder. He sat down again easily, and then arose as the court moved, apparently to go. Again a guard reached over. Vermilyea turned quickly, recovered his air cushion, and then, preceded and followed by the three Provincial police guards, was hurried through the court room through the large door, down the stairway to the same double cell in the same block in the south wing which he will occupy until the date set for the execution.

From this time on, careful guard will be kept over the prisoner, it was stated today by Governor G. French of the County Gaol. Since the verdict of the jury had been delivered late last evening, a special guard has been placed in the same cell with Vermilyea and will be assisted by another guard just outside the door.

Appetite Seems Good

Vermilyea has shown little loss of appetite. Even though laboring under the stress of the final verdict of guilty, early this morning, at six-thirty o'clock he arose, took the first of the day's airing and shortly before seven o'clock a breakfast of bread, milk and porridge was given him. He ate well, apparently undisturbed. Throughout the night his sleep has been untroubled and during the earlier part of the night had evidenced a desire to chat with his guards. Conversation with the prisoner, however, is not encouraged.

It had not been intimated by defence counsel whether an appeal from the sentence would be made. It was gathered that the first move toward an appeal if such was contemplated would be made by chief defence counsel, Col. R. H. Greer, K.C., Toronto who so capably conducted the trial since its beginning. He has been assisted by Mr. C. A. Payne, K.C. of this city.

Continent-Wide Interest

No case in local annals has ever exercised so great interest as this trial on account of the prominence of the victim and the accused, of their relationship, the accusation of the crown that a man had crossed the continent from the Pacific Coast and after the commission of the crime fled by taxicabs, train and plane to his California home at which he arrived in little over forty hours after the attack. The interest was accentuated by the rapidity with which the police secured and followed the clue to the west coast and secured the arrest. There was the added interest of the insanity defence, and many other factors including of course the nature of the attack, which shocked the entire province. The interest in the case was continent-wide.

Officials Praised

Mr. Justice Jeffrey, while off the bench praised the officials of the county on the excellent manner in which they had carried out the arrangements for the holding of the trial and on their general performance of their duties.

The trial was marked by quite serious illness of jurors with influenza. The father of one of the jurors died at Trenton and the son was unable to attend the last rites, the funeral cortege proceeding through Belleville and passing before the hotel, where the jury was staying, providing the juror a means of seeing through the window the funeral pass. In the excitement of going to attend the trial, a spectator died suddenly on Monday morning in the lower part of the courthouse.

Jury's Long Guard

Last night (Monday) was the first night the jury was free. They had been under guard at the Belvidere Hotel for twelve nights and were under guard thirteen days. Most of them stayed in Belleville last night though they come from the country, so that they have been away from their homes at least a full two weeks.

The costs of the trial will be very heavy, what with long distance witnesses who were kept here a lengthy time and the prolonged period for which the jury was held along with the balance of the jury which was not sworn in on the Vermilyea case.

Course of Trial

The trial began on February 12, when the case was given to the grand jury to deliberate. On February 13th, the trial began on the presentation of a true bill by the grand jury. The jury of nine farmers, two laborers and one merchant was sworn in and the trial began immediately. Sitting every day since that time except Sundays and a week ago Monday, when there was an adjournment on account of illness of a number of the jury from influenza the trial concluded only late Monday night.

The hatchet attack on Mrs. Aurelia Vermilyea, widow of the late Nathaniel Vermilyea, took place on the lawn of the daughter of the victim about nine thirty of the night of October 4th, 1934. A few hours afterwards inquiry was made in California for Harold Vermilyea, eldest son of the victim and on his appearance at his home two days later he was arrested for the Belleville police by Chief Loch of Ontario, California. Vermilyea waived extradition and came to Canada to stand trial. He arrived here on Sunday, October 21, and was remanded on the charge of murder. After several remands he was given a preliminary hearing which lasted for a number of weeks, the sittings of the police court being held on Saturdays for the convenience of defence counsel, Col Greer. Vermilyea was committed for trial.

Taxi, Train and Plane

It was not established in the trial how Vermilyea came to Canada, but it is presumed by the crown, he came by train as he left Ontario, California on September 25th. Evidence was produced, that he was in Toronto on Sunday, September 30th. The crown charged he visited Belleville by night by taxicab on October 1st and October 4th and that on the latter visit he murderously attacked his mother whom, the crown charged he escorted from the house, where she lived to go to the home of her daughter. The crown's contention was that the departure from Belleville to California was by taxicab, to Toronto and to Hamilton, thence by train to Chicago, then to Glendale by airplane, from Glendale to Los Angeles by taxicab and thence in his own car to his home in Ontario, California.

In the nature of the return as charged the trial was one of the most remarkable in Ontario annals of crime.

The trial was the longest criminal trial in Ontario as well as in Hastings County.

The defence set up a not guilty plea and also a secondary defence of insanity.

His Early Life

Vermilyea born in Thurlow four miles from Belleville spent his early days in that township, attending school, then he attended college here for some years, thence he went to the University of Toronto, graduating in a general course in 1907 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He had a slight impediment in his speech and attended a school for correction of this defect. Then he took a course in business accounting. In school and college he had played a part in sport as a boxer and runner and won a championship in boxing at 'Varsity. Some years after graduation he went to the Pacific coast to British Columbia, then down the coast to California and at one time was living near the Mexican boundary. He finally settled at Ontario, California. He was married and had a daughter and son. He engaged in the orange plantation business and was a salesman up to a year or so ago. Five years ago he had divorced his wife.

He was last here in 1923 shortly after the death of his father in connection with the probate of his will.

Vermilyea is a well built man weighing about one hundred and sixty pounds and has carried a name as a good dresser.

His Reaction

During the trial his reaction has not been marked as he has generally sat with his head slightly bowed and looking away from the jury.

A large number of witnesses were brought from the coast and at points along the trip which the crown evidence charged he took on his return trip as well as a number of Toronto hotel employees and taxicab drivers from Toronto. Several Belleville persons while not eyewitnesses of the attack on Mrs. Vermilyea swore they saw two persons cross the lawn and either heard words or moans a few brief seconds afterwards.

California witnesses left to-day for their home after their long stay in Belleville.

Lake Shore held a gain and Tork Hughes was unchanged while other sections were down by from seven dollars. Silver stocks continued slow.

New Madrid Corporation changed hands in improved volume with the listing, Kenilworth Gold and Cambridge was in active demand at a small advance. Noranda sold a little lower.

McWatters had the trading fraternity guessing as to what is ahead in heavy volume on a rising price trend. Opening at 1.06 the price advanced to 1.11 before encountering offerings in volume after which it settled later to 1.10.

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York Feb. 26—(AP)— Renewed pressure on the rails tended to unsettle the stock market in the late trading today. Santa Fe, Union Pacific, N.Y. Central and a number of other rails broke from one to two points after displaying a relatively firm front in the early dealings. The trading volume expanded substantially on the decline. Tonnoweanda and Reading were mentioned dropped 2 points, but the other utilities were narrow. Motor stocks and scattered specialties held moderate gains.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 26—(CP)—Industrial shares were in the limelight on quite a stock demand and early afternoon trading on the Toronto exchange today. The board were of minor fractions mainly Nickel, Brazilian, Ford A, the distillery stocks and Canada Steel were all unchanged or slightly higher.

Dominion Tar Common suffered a reaction from yesterday's advance, giving back 6 1-2 points of the 7 with morning trade in the issue small. Steel, food and utility stocks moved quietly mainly at unchanged prices and other conditions above mentioned. Canada Steel dropped today 1 1-2.

Hollinger, a new listing appeared in the trade at 6 1-2. The Moore Corporation stocks held to the up side.

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 26—(AP)—Trends were still a little cloudy in today's financial markets with gains and here, timing tendencies were in evidence.

Among shares of Canadian companies, International Nickel was a trifle lower, but Dominion Steels, Dome and Canadian Pacific got up minor fractions. On the curb, Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting ruled steady. Canadian funds held unchanged at Saturday's close.

Gains of fractions to around a point were recorded by Allied Chemical, Aguirre, American Crystal, Cuban-American, Great Western, South Porto Rico, Borg-Warner, American Safety Razor, U.S. Smelting, American Smelting, Westinghouse, General Electric, Freeport Texas, Santa Fe, Union Pacific and American Can. Homestake Mining lost 5 and Bolduin Locomotive Command and Preferred, each 3. Rumors, speculative, say the corporation's tentative reorganization plans were being studied.

SEALING FLEET ON WAY TO FLOES

Head Out of St. John's Harbor to Capture Seals

St. John's Nfld., Feb. 26.—(CP Cable)—Newfoundland's famed sealing fleet will send its first ship away for the ice floes today. Before nightfall the veteran Ranger—one of the last of the old "wooden walls" of the 19th Century Fleet, will be heeling out of St. John's Harbor with 100 men on board for her 62nd encounter with the floes.

In another eight days, eight ships —making up the biggest fleet in years—will swing up the coast in search of the "Main Patch" and a pot of gold for more than 1,500 hardy seal killers.

The Ranger is bound for the West Coast of Newfoundland to hunt the seals that come down into the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the Arctic ice that drifts through the Strait of Belle Isle. It will be the first time in four years a ship has gone into the gulf to kill seals.

URGES HOTELMEN TO OLD INN IDEA

Hotel Association Hear G. H. O'Neil Offer Plan

London, Ont., Feb. 26 (CP)— Plans to have owners of hotels in towns and small centres throughout Ontario develop their hostelries along the lines of the famous old English inns will be proposed today to hotel owners and managers attending the first parts of the London zone of the Hotel Association of Canada, it was announced by George H. O'Neil, formerly of this city, Honorary President of the Association. The members of the Association in this zone and other hotel representatives, not members, are meeting this afternoon.

Five Suggestions

Mr. O'Neil listed in particular several points to be discussed. These, in brief were:

1. To have proprietors of hotels in small towns and villages work towards the style of the Old English Inn.

2. To recommend to the Government a change in the Fire Prevention Act which would require all hotels under fifty rooms and over two storeys in height to have a fire escape, instead of old-fashioned rope fire escape will also come out. Mr. O'Neil pointed out it should be fastened to the side of the window instead of below it.

3. The actual definition of "Hotel" is to be clear.

5. All things pertaining to the Liquor Control Act affecting hotels to be clear and concise.

In explaining the desire to have the hotels in small towns come to the style of the English inn, Mr. O'Neil remarked the hotels in England were famous not because they imitate the large hotels of the larger cities.

Agents of Scottish Distillers Examined Today

FYLE IS PRODUCED

Blandishments Referred to as Hereditary Ones

Toronto, Feb. 26 (CP)—Evidence in the Royal Commission Inquiry of Judge Duncan C. Ross of St. Thomas into affairs of the former Ontario Liquor Control Board was completed here today. Counsel will sum up the evidence Thursday.

The inquiry started last November and after several sessions adjourned until Jan. 31. Due to lack of necessary evidence several adjournments were made and the hearing was resumed yesterday.

Today's brief session was chiefly concerned with examination of agents of Scottish distillers. Just as the session was about to close a fyle was produced from the Liquor Board office. J. B. Unsworth, former Secretary, and the chief Commissioner, said he had not seen it until last November.

Evidence of Agents

The fyle contained a list of local agents of old country brewery and distillery firms. Initials on it, Unsworth said he identified were those of Hilvart McClenaghan, former Chief Commissioner.

Commissioner Blandishments which consisted of "just telling the truth" and "keeping out of trouble" and having a certain brand of Scotch whiskey listed with the Board. James Hill of Toronto, one of several agents for Scotch distilleries to testify, said he had a certain brand of Scotch whiskey listed in 1926.

Sir Henry Drayton was Chairman of the Board at the time. Hill had interviews with Sir Henry Drayton, D. B. Hanna, but made no headway.

Hereditary Ones

Asked by A. G. Slaght, K.C., of Toronto, counsel for certain clients, what blandishments he used to have the fyle produced, Hill replied: "The hereditary ones."

Pressed for an explanation he referred to his Scottish accent and added, "just telling the truth."

Distillery agents present were: Col. F. B. Robins, W. J. Mills, Joseph Wright, Sr., G. H. G. Pickering and Herbert S. Hamilton, all of Toronto.

Charles Price, representative of Teachers Highland Cream, was recalled and questioned regarding certain drafts from the distillery. He had testified these had been cashed but found no record of such.

RUSSIAN FARM REFORMS

For the purpose of giving the workers on collective farms new incentives to work harder and produce more, the Soviet Government soon will introduce changes in the collective-farm system.

The Government proposes to encourage collective-farm members to improve their joint property by assuring them permanent use of the land.

Moscow also will define clearly what is collective-farm property, and what is the property of individuals.

It is the aim of the authorities to bring the remaining 5,000,000 peasants into the collective farm system by the reforms, and also to extend the use of industrial methods in agriculture.

As to the tenure of the land, a Moscow correspondent of the New York Times said that I. A. Yakovleff, Chief of the Agricultural Department of the Communist Party, and formerly Commissar of Agriculture, pointed out that the land was State property, not to be sold, mortgaged or rented. It will be assigned permanently to the membership of a collective farm so the members will know that they will reap the benefit of improvements they made.

CRIME DETECTOR

Tucked away in little items in the newspapers, mention of the "lie-detector" developed by the Scientific Crime Detection Laboratory of Northwestern University, is becoming more and more frequent.

The "lie-detector", or, as it is more formally known, the Keeler Polygraph, already has been of much use in crime detection. Fred E. Inbau, of the Northwestern University School of Law, recently reported in The Scientific Monthly that approximately 2,000 bank employees in fifty-two Chicago banks had been examined with the instrument in the last three years to detect embezzlers.

From 10 to 25 per cent. of the entire personnel of some institutions examined were found lying regarding thefts of money. In nearly all such instances the findings of the machine later were substantiated by confessions or evidence.

"Lie-Detectors" of one kind or another have been used for many generations. Long before psychologists ever attempted to devise scientific methods of detecting deception, it was recognized that conscious lying ordinarily produces evident emotional disturbances. Some persons when lying invariably blush; others squirm, squint, speak in a peculiar tense monotone, or exhibit other signs in effort to deceive by innuendo.

In China there is said to have been an ancient method of lie-detection: the accused was requested to chew rice and then spit it out for examination. If the rice appeared dry, the subject was considered guilty; his fear of detection was supposed to inhibit the secretion of saliva.

Many college laboratories today use 'lie-detectors' to demonstrate the known fact that emotional disturbances, such as those accompanying lying, change the electrical resistance of the skin. These instruments generally consist of a galvanometer and Wheatstone's bridge, and measure alterations in a small and imperceptible current passed through the body during the questioning. Such instruments are highly accurate, possibly too much so. They measure all sorts of emotional states, and may be unfair to the subject.

CHANGES

"That we live in a changing world becomes more plain every day. Perhaps this is no more clearly to be seen than in the statement of the head auditor of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the current number of their Quarterly to the effect that the Mounted Police are hardly ever use horses," says the Montreal Star. "He says that last year members of the force travelled 10,506,632 miles on official business and the mileage that the horse helped them to travel was so slight as to be unnoticed.

"Modernity goes far to kill romance. The Mounted Police nowadays mount motor vehicles or mount on wings in airplanes, and the horse is stalled. We can no longer hope to see the R. C. M. P. pose out after their man, tearing over the prairie hell-for-leather on the backs of broncbos. We have to make our romance about them out of internal combustion engines.

"Nor are the Mounted Police unique in this, for the horse is a back number in the army, too. The cavalry corps becomes a tank corps, and all the dash and brightness and drama are taken out of battle by reason of the fact that man now is more into action enclosed in bullet-proof boxes on caterpillar wheels. It is not nice, but it may well be a potent factor in the preservation of peace.

"Yet, while horses are out of the picture, dogs keep moving. They are dogged, after all, and will not be suppressed. The Mounted Police do not disdain dogs. They still mush through the white immensities with dog sleighs—and the dogs are taken to their posts by airplane."

WHERE PEOPLE ARE LUMPED TOGETHER

Professor C. B. Fawcett, writing in the British quarterly "Population", shows that all over the world the population, in and near the great towns continues to increase while the rural areas are declining. In the case of Canada he illustrates this fact by these striking figures:

"The idea of concentration of population in Canada is a long and comparatively narrow strip of land which extends from the head of Lake Superior, on the St. Lawrence forty miles below Montreal, up the St. Lawrence Lowland and along the northern shores of Lakes Ontario and Erie to the south end of the Lake Peninsula at the boundary river St. Clair.

The length of this strip of land is nearly 550 miles, but its width nowhere reaches a fifth, and averages less than a tenth, of that distance. The area of all the counties whose populations are included is 57,951 square miles, but more than a third of this area is that of the almost uninhabited parts which extend on to the higher land to the north of the lowland, especially in Quebec Province. The total population at the census of 1931 was 4,455,623. Thus there is here on approximately 1 per cent of the total area of the Dominion nearly 1 per cent of its total population, with a mean density of nearly 120 persons per square mile.

Professor Fawcett's eye ranges over Australia and Great Britain and finds the same conditions. In New South Wales one twenty-fifth of the State, lying along the coast, has a population of 2,196,196 or two-thirds of the whole. In the State of Victoria there is a similar populous area embracing six counties and 9,368 square miles, which has 1,600,000 or half a tenth of the whole State and has 68 per cent. of the population. The New South Wales area includes the cities of Sydney and Newcastle, and the populous area in Victoria contains the city of Melbourne.

In England, says Professor Fawcett, there is the same concentration of population in a zone extending diagonally from southeast to northwest. It contains approximately 18,000 square miles or about one-fifth of the area of Great Britain and has a population of 25,805,915. It is not merely a drift to the towns but a general movement to particular groups of urban centres from other towns as well as from rural areas. In these concentrated zones the densities of population are from 600 to 1,000 persons per square mile in Canada and Australia, 600 in the United States and nearly 1,500 in England.

Professor Fawcett says there are several causes for this concentration, such as the increasing use of machinery on the land, resulting in the reduction of the number of farm workers; the improvement in the farm yield per acre; the change from handicraft to factory work and the natural gregariousness of mankind. But although Professor Fawcett thinks the pioneer period of agricultural-emigration is over he should not assume that present conditions in Canada are permanent. There may come a dispersion of these agglomerations of population in response to new economic forces. Even in this country we heard the mayor of Montreal asserting that 200,000 people in Greater Montreal must be located on the land. In the United States particularly, the decentralization of industry is building up small towns at the expense of great cities, and the depression has driven two or three million city dwellers back to the land.—London Advertiser.

THE HOPEFUL APPLE TREE

This is the season when men being tired of the long winter's fuss that they see robins hopping on their verandahs and hear crows cawing on the high, bare trees. For this is the season when men would persuade themselves that spring has come. They would fain say to themselves, "For, lo! the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land."

It remained for a nickel miner at Sudbury, however, to see the first sign of spring—and that in a place where least it might be expected. Six hundred feet beneath the surface, deep in a mine of the International Nickel Company, George Smith found a tiny apple tree, three and a half inches in height, all in leaf and ready to blossom. Spring had arrived.

The urge of spring is irresistible. The little apple tree could surely never have found a more impossible place to grow. When the core of an apple was thrown away by some unwitting miner, little did he think that Nature would avail herself of this opportunity to beautify the ugly, to adorn the ordinary. It is this persistence of Nature that makes us sure of spring, as far as we can be sure of anything in this transitory world. She never fails; has never been known to fail; and will not

"Never yet was a springtime,
Late though lingered the snow,
That the sap stirred not at the whisper
Of the southwind, sweet and low;
Never yet was was a springtime
When the buds forgot to blow."
—Montreal Star.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits that justice commends and that wisdom guides.—Addison.

ANCIENT THEMES

As long as there is glamour in a name
Poets will write of splendid, ancient themes,
Since certain syllables can touch to flame
Men's thoughts and quicken beauty in their dreams.
New tales are good, for virtues have not died;
There is no dearth of sacrifice today,
Still honor dwells in countless hearts, and pride,
Unquestioned, shares with truth its deathless sway.

Yet there is magic by time's touch conferred
On men and lands: Ulysses, Egypt, Troy
Portray the power latent in a word,
Thought leaps to greet them with unmeasured joy.
We know not why, but to the past there clings
The mystic charm of vague and fabulous things.

—Aline Michaelis.

"LOVE THY NEIGHBOR" is the title of one of the new song hits, which may be taken as an indication that the world is turning its face toward the Brotherhood of Man, but it is doubtful if all who sing it realize fully or give any thought to what "Love Thy Neighbor" really means.

SENTIMENTAL SONGS seem to be coming back. Frinstance "Old Faithful", glorifying a horse which has been in the family for many years. "The Old Spinning Wheel" carried the mind back to childhood days for those with the frost of the years tinting their wits. There are others along the same line showing, it is to be hoped, that the deluge of mushy, sickly-sweet love songs is on the ebb—the air has certainly been heavy with that kind of slush for some time and the newer type of song is a change for the better.

"DEATH VALLEY" is one of the great open spaces of the Western United States, a vast space of arid desert, depressed considerably below the level of the sea. One of its chief claims to fame is the fact that deep in this desolate spot an individual known as "Death Valley Scott" has built a magnificent palace where he reigns as king for a short time, surrounded by a faithful band of servants. Scott first penetrated the desert as a prospector and came out with a fortune in gold. There was a great rush to the news leaked out of Scott's luck, but while many gold seekers ventured into the waterless inferno no one located the source of Scott's supposed wealth. Many over-eager prospectors rushed into the desert without proper outfits and perished of thirst, their bones bleaching on the sand-swept banks this desolate land. Scott is said to have lost several fortunes but always returned to Death Valley and emerged with a fresh fortune. Gold hunters gave up trying to find him to the treasure chest were outsmarted by him and his is the secret yet. He still lives and his desert palace stands as a monument to the place which gave him several fortunes. Speaking of Death Valley, Fred Whitney, passenger plane pilot, of California, who has been in Belleville in connection with the Vermilyea case, says that he flies over that section regularly, and it is about the only part of the journey from Kansas City to California where the airplane passengers get a sensation of great height. Flying along at normal height of about 2,000 feet the plane reaches Death Valley and without climbing a foot, the plane is twice as high from the ground, due to the depression which is one of the features of Death Valley district, being far below sea level. Passengers immediately ask, "Why are we flying so high here", not realizing that the dip in the ground has doubled the altitude.

On one occasion Father Bernard travelled by train to Wigan to attend some important ceremony. In the same carriage a full one, was an unpleasant traveller who made himself objectionable in every possible way. When he at last alighted, Father Bernard put his head out of the window and called out: "You have left something behind in the carriage." The man hastened back and asked what he had left. "A very bad impression," said Father Bernard.

YOU MAY HAVE COMPLEX AND NOT KNOW IT

It is Claimed That Forgotten Emotions Return as Complexes

By LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health and Hygiene.

(Copyright, 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

No matter what the cause for your mental reaction, you are accused of a complex. If you don't like dogs or cats, you have a complex. Should you fail to wind the clock, that's a complex, too.

Suppose you don't like milk or fish—any dislike for a special kind of food must be caused by a complex. If you crave something very much, whether it be food, sweets, dancing, cards or anything else, the craving desire has a complex at the bottom of it.

And don't, whatever you do, forget your own telephone number, or call your husband, wife or sweetheart by his or her name. The complex you reveal will most assuredly get you into trouble.

Fifteen years ago the word complex was practically unknown. Ten years ago only specialists in psychoanalytic studies were familiar with it. Today it's a word that is bandied around so much that already it is added to the vocabulary as a permanent fixture.

"Complex" has a very definite scientific meaning. It is a repressed and forgotten emotion! No one knows what his complexes really are, but they are there, for we possess. They are not to memory, and people can be absolutely free from them.

Every individual has desires he cannot gratify, that he must forego out of his mind. Therefore men, women and children, of all ages keep storing up complexes.

It is important to emphasize that repressed emotions are forgotten degree of emotion attached to them in order to qualify as complexes.

Suppose your heart yearns for a car. Well, you figure it all out, you walk and consider the matter then you decide that you cannot afford it, so you put it out of mind.

When you try to forget, you repress. From a scientific viewpoint, what you do is push the unwanted desire from your conscious mind into your unconscious.

Now, then, if this repressed desire or an automobile has no emotion, or actually no desire attached to it, the repression will in time fade from your mind, both from the conscious as well as the unconscious part of it.

But suppose you are a young man in the courting stage. You want that car for a definite purpose—to help you to win the lady of your choice. You fear your rivals who own cars. You want that car about as badly as you ever wanted anything.

But the pocketbook refuses to stretch, in spite of your wishes. Disappointment, a feeling of inferiority, wounded pride—all get mixed up in the mind, and you cannot gratify. You repress the desire for a car. You try to put it out of your mind. And finally succeed!

Nevertheless, although you may think so, you are not through with this complex by any means. Sooner or later it may find expression in the form of a strong dislike for people who own cars, or in a fear of cars, or an irresistible desire to quit your regular work and become a chauffeur. Such is the reason for any one of a number of possible complexes.

Either position requires many qualities in personality that of leadership and it has always been felt that we have had a leader worthy of the name during the years that you have guided the destinies of Centre Sunday School.

We take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation of these splendid services by asking you to accept this reading lamp and we hasten to add that it is our sincere wish that your life and health may be spared for many more years and may those years continue to be years of service, as they are at present in the years that have passed.

FALLS 15 FEET TO BOTTOM OF CRYPT

Archie Jackson, London, Visiting Mother's Grave at Time

LONDON, Ont., Feb. 26.—(CP)—While his skull fractured Archie Jackson, 19, was dead after falling at the bottom of a crypt in the Little Family Mausoleum at Mount Pleasant Cemetery here, his mother stood for hours. Yesterday afternoon Jackson left his home on Oxford Street with the expressed intention of visiting his mother's grave. When he did not return last night city police were notified by his father and a search was started.

Today Mr. Rankin, caretaker at the cemetery, informed provincial police a man's body had been found. Jackson was identified by his father. It is believed that while visiting Jackson lifted the heavy stone lid on the crypt and lost his balance, falling 15 feet to the stone flooring.

Fear of Middle Age

Severe Strain on the Nerves

The dread of middle age
Has ruined the health of many a woman.
To some it is a worry that brings a nervous breakdown.
This period in life has its difficulties,
But they are greatly exaggerated by the imagination.
It is the fear and worry that depletes the nervous system,
Rather than the natural change at this time of life.
By keeping the blood rich and red
And thereby supplying nutrition to the nervous system,
You need have no fear of middle age.
By using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food regularly,
Throughout this period of change,
You can usually avoid any serious trouble.
With a good supply of nerve force
To ensure the health and vigor of mind and body,
You banish from your mind any worry
You may have had about middle life.

DENIES OWNING LIQUOR AGENCY

Harry Price, Former M. L. A. on Stand in Toll Gate Probe

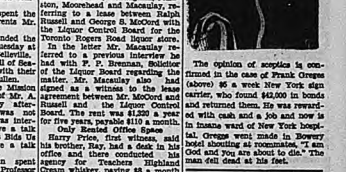
Toronto, Feb. 25 (CP)—Harry Price, former M.L.A. for West York, denied he really owned the Teachers Highland Cream liquor agency in reply to questions of Arthur G. Slaght, K.C., Commission Counsel, when inquiry into toll-gate charges concerning the Ontario Liquor Commission resumed here today before Judge Duncan Ross.

Mr. Price also denied he had ever spoken about the sales of this brand with Mr. R. Hargraft, Ontario Liquor Control Board in interviews he had with them.

Mr. Slaght introduced a letter from Leopold Macaulay, K.C., former Ontario Minister of Highways, dated March 27, 1928, on the letterhead of his firm, McLaughlin, Johnston, Macaulay & Kendall, referring to a lease between Ralph Russell and George H. Wood with the Liquor Control Board for the Toronto Rogers Road liquor store.

In the letter Mr. Macaulay referred to a previous interview he had with P. F. Brennan, Solicitor of the Liquor Board regarding the matter. Mr. Macaulay also had signed as a witness to the lease agreement between Mr. McCord and Russell and Liquor Control Board. The rent was $1,200 a year for five years, payable $100 a month.

Only Record Office



Harry Price, first witness, said his brother, Jay had a desk in his office and there conducted his agency for Teachers Highland Cream whiskey, paying $8 a month rent.

A letter from John Guest giving his money he received from the William H. Price estate was shown and Mr. Guest had been given a total of $6,000 in three parts and a fraction of a fifth from 1927 to May 1, 1931.

Ralph Russell, Secretary of the Rogers Realties, Ltd. said that Mr. Macaulay had nothing to do with forming the Rogers Realties or Rogers Road liquor store.

Witness said cheques for rental of the store were sent to him and he endorsed them and forwarded them to the law firm of McLaughlin, Johnston, Macaulay and Monday. The firm sent half of each cheque back to him, he said. The cheques were made payable to him and George McCord, Mr. Russell stated.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

SPIRIT WILLING, BUT POCKET-BOOK WEAK

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Sometimes I feel the only acquaintance I have with girls is through your column. I'd love to go out with them and have a good time, but my pocketbook cannot stand the strain. I have to work like the mischief to pay my expenses and have to send a little money home to help my mother from doing the family washing.

Now, by the time a man takes one of these lovely bunches of fluff out for evening it knocks the backbone out of a five dollar bill, and I can't afford that. Girls write to you columns and say they would be perfectly willing to have men visit them at their homes, or go out for a walk. Where do these dames keep themselves, I'm asking you?

Gyrano

Well, my dear Cyrano, you do not go to a hothouse if you're looking for wild violets, arbutus or Spring, of that ilk. Young ladies who frequent country clubs and swagger parties would probably be bored to death by an evening at home or a walk. But there are hundreds of girls who would be very thank ful for even this little bit of attention.

If you can furnish the necessary passport of respectability, you will be very welcome at tea dances, card-parties and other entertainments of the various girl clubs where you will meet attractive girls, all of whom have jobs and know the value of money.

SHE MET HIM AT THE SKATING RINK

Dear Miss Fairfax:

We skated together a number of times at the rink, and enjoyed each other's company immensely. He wanted to see me some, but as I didn't know anything about him, I declined. When I met him at the rink a second time he did not invite me to skate and was evidently mad that I had not let him see me home.

I go once or twice a week, but never see him at the rink any more. He was such a nice fellow, I'm sorry I turned him down.

Prudence.

If you were not introduced to him by any of your friends or acquaintances at the rink, it seems to me you did what was only to be expected of a "nice" girl in declining to have as utter stranger see you home. As I understand it, young people skate there at all hours, and the end of the evening sees the end of their acquaintances. Perhaps you may meet him again, but it's a question of chance, as you don't know anything about him.

A MOTHER-IN-LAW HAS HER SAY

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Now that it's all over and my son is really married, I'll admit that I tried to prevent his taking a wife. I had nothing against the girl, but thought he was a little young to marry. He did marry over my objections, and all three of us are living under the same roof. The house belongs to me, and my son pays the running expenses.

My daughter-in-law is very modern and employed. I should like to have by-gones be by-gones, and now be friendly with this girl, but she insists on calling me Mrs.....; and is very aloof in her relations with me.

Mother-in-Law

You can hardly expect the girl to gush over you and treat you as if you were her own mother, when you tried to keep your son from marrying her. Now that you have become reconciled, use all your tact and charm in winning her over. The situation is difficult, I'll admit. But a wise older woman should be able to sail around the rocks successfully.

Correct Manners

DINNER ETIQUETTE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Is it correct to serve and take away plates at the left of one's guests, or must they be served from the right? should be served and removed from the guest's left. Please let me know if I am to be the correct custom.

2. When entertaining, and ladies and gentlemen are in the living-room, and others arrive, and I go to introduce a lady, is it necessary to start at the left and go around the room? I introduce her to all the ladies first, or is it just as correct to introduce her to the ladies and gentlemen in the order in which they are around the room?

3. When one's guests number sixteen or twenty, is it permissible to bring in two ladies and give their names at once, or a lady and her husband, or must each person be introduced separately?

4. When entertaining at dinner, is it just as correct to have my tea service and cups and saucers on the tea wagon beside me at the table and pour the tea on it, or is it better to have it all on a tray on the table?

5. When serving chicken or turkey, is it better to have the host carve at the table or should it be carved in the kitchen?

P.

1. All serving dishes should be passed to the left of the guest—that is definite. Whether plates should be removed from the left or from the right of the guest, isn't so definite. Some hostesses prefer one way, and some the other, and there is no correct or incorrect objection to having the plates removed from the right is that one must constantly reach for a glass, and this motion might bring you in contact with the waiters' arm.

2. There is no rule or even suggestion that at the left side going around the room" when we make introductions. To me it is more convenient when you are making your introductions. But try to avoid introducing a man across room introducing her or him to t.e group standing near you, and later, the rest of the group. It is perfectly discovered, to make a large-group introduction at once—and especially the award for a guest.

3. Make your introductions individually—so you will give honor to the individuals, and compliment to the people you are introducing.

4. If you find it more convenient to have your tea service on a tea wagon or service table at your right side, this is entirely a proper thing for you to do. As a matter of fact, with the items that you will probably have to place on the table, it would undoubtedly be vastly more convenient and sensible to have this extra service on the serving table.

5. Either is correct—you do whatever is more convenient for your household. It's easier for the serving to have the chicken or turkey carved in the kitchen—but, if your husband or you like to carve, it's delightfully hospitable and informal to do the carving at the table.

Attire, Makeup Important When One Goes 'Platinum'

(The Beauty Box)

Alice Faye

A decided blonde, she knows she must consider her hair tone in makeup

She weeps.

Don't take heart. We have swell, elegant exercise for her and it has a pretty name, "Swaying in the wind". If she will stick to the calesthenics for three or four minutes, preferably in fifteen minutes each day, she will find that her torso is considerably deflated.

Stand on the erect, hands clasp high over the head. Swing forward slightly, then do a back swing, always keeping the hands lifted. The point is to stretch the body away from the hips. No need of stretching the legs, though it is fun to come up on the toes now and then. Good luck

Ingrowing toe nails result from wearing shoes too narrow at the tip. The nail is pressed into the flesh, which hardens, causing twinges and misery.

Wear wider shoes. Cut the nail straight across, not down at the sides. Ever; night apply mineral oil; every morning work off the dead skin gently by using an orange wood stick. Don't do any cutting which avails nothing, and there is danger of infection.

Clay packs do clear the skin of blackheads. Get a package of kaolin, which is Fuller's earth made clean. Mix with witch hazel to form a paste the consistency of whipped cream. Spread over a clean surface, let it remain on until it begins to flake.

Remove with tepid water, dry and apply a cold cream or a thin muscle oil. There will be an appearance of freshness that will gladden the heart of the beauty waller.

Make Child A 'Shining' Example?

Writer Opposes Idea Making One Pattern for Other to Follow

By LISA GRENELLE

"Why can't you be a good girl, Louise, like Elsie," mother pleaded again. "Elsie's room never looks like this, I don't have to remind Elsie to wash her neck."

"—do her home work on time, keep clean, speak politely to visitors, just copy the model..." Louise interrupted, finishing her mother's recital. Why not. She knew it, all the heart. Elsie had been used as a "shining example" for so long. Elsie never did anything she shouldn't.

"Don't you want to be good, Louise?" mother asked in a hurt tone.

"I don't want to be like Elsie," Louise retorted.

"Elsie's a good girl."

"That's why I hate her."

"Louise!"

Very shocking I know. But how did you feel about shining examples when you were small? Lots of them in the way you did teacher's pets, cry-babies and boys with curls?

Doesn't it annoy you yet when they go on and on about somebody, "how brilliant, how beautiful, how fine, how to is leave the country, change your name and grow a beard.

Elsie's shining example didn't make me want to be like her, I'm frankly, contrary-wise it made a little revolt in her, one of those "agin the government" children—very difficult. And certainly it didn't incline her to be a shining light.

No child should ever be used as an example of another.

No child should be reproached, scolded, or punished in the presence of another brother, sister or friend.

No member of the family should t: used as a threat to make a child behave. Not even "Listen or I'll you do that again, Willie, I'll tell father when he comes home". What a home environment that is. This applies also to policemen, uncles, aunts and older brothers.

I know it's hard to train children without using examples now and then, but believe me it pays in the long run.

You see the most constructive object of child training is to build up love, confidence, loyalty and congeniality among the members of the family, among brothers and sisters. This cannot be done if you humiliate one child in front of another, if you make one child feel inferior, a greater burden, or less loved, or of lesser importance.

Back again comes the smart little shirtmaker frock that the average shopper is always seeking. One shop is showing a whole series of these frocks in pastel shades of various fabrics. Mostly the frocks have tucked bosom inserts, jewelled studs and matching cuff-links. Palm Beach favors these frocks, especially for golf.

The inner eye sees us wearing white linen with dark blue touches during our vacations next Summer since this type of frock is registering strongly at the resorts. A typical model is in white linen with flat surplice vlaz small pearl down the side of the bodice and belt, all in navy blue linen. The short sleeves are also fastened with a tiny blue linen bow.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"Strange Wives"

Edith Whitcomb Stage of Mad, Merry Marital Mix-up

Full of delightful comedy, intriguing situations and beautiful women is "Strange Wives" which opened yesterday at the Capitol theatre. It is the story of a young man who plans to be wed marrying one girl, but soon discovered he was married to a whole family—and what a family!

That's the spot Roger Fryne finds himself in with June Clayworth in this uproarious comedy drama.

They were interrupted right in the middle of their honeymoon by her sith of kin. Print came a brother, a genius of the violin, who came to live with them when he was thrown out of his own home for not being able to pay his rent. He tried to convince the landlady he was a genius, but she didn't know what the word meant.

Soon his wife's whole family had seeped into Roger's household. Soon there are so many that Roger becomes desperate, and also many complications arise as each one always calling on him for funds. Enough is enough, and like the proverbial worm Roger turns on the pack. He decides he has worked for his wife's family long enough, and now they are going to work for him, every one to become a stock member.

In the meantime his wife has been having an affair with a former admirer. At last, driven almost insane with relatives and worry, Roger calls for a showdown, puts his in-laws in their respective places and at last has a home. Instead of a meeting place for destitute Russians.

In order to assure authentic background it was found necessary to use native Russians in this picture, some of whom formerly held high positions in their country. The technical director on the story, Nicholas Kolodinsky, was formerly a provost-marshal of the Czarist regime.

Some unusual and picturesque scenes are depicted in the film, such as the Russian ball in New York, where the immigrants arrive from the other side. In sharp contrast to this is the ball in the Czar's palace shown in the picture.

Included in the supporting cast are Esther Ralston, Hugh O'Connell, Ralph Forbes, Cesar Romero and Charles Bickford.

Added Attractions

A comedy of unusual merit, featuring Vince Barnett and entitled "Super Stupid", deserves special mention. This comedy is packed with equally fine short subjects will be shown at each performance in conjunction with the feature attraction. Included in the group of shorts is a beautiful and musical scenic "Paradise of the Pacific"; a real comedy entirety of outstanding vaudeville acts; and an ever popular Scrappy Cartoon.

Due to popular demand we're given today. Shows at 2.30; 7.15, 9.15.

AT THE BELLE

"Forsaking All Others"

Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Robert Montgomery

Metro-Goldwyn Mayer's much talked about filmization of the notable stage hit, "Forsaking All Others", with the luscious teaming combination of Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Robert Montgomery in one picture, is the special film attraction for presentation at the Belle Tomorrow (Wednesday) Thursday and Friday, matinee and evening.

Based on the successful play by Frank Cavett and Edward Roberts, which presents the eternal triangle from a fresh and highly diverting viewpoint, the new picture was directed by W. S. VanDyke, whose long string of successes culminated with the recent "Thin Man" and "Evelyn Prentice".

A Different Joan

From all reports there is a surprise in store for the thousands who enlist themselves as ardent Joan Crawford fans for in her latest vehicle the popular young star is said to have been assigned a role which presents a decided departure from her usual characterizations.

Cast as a young Parkavenuite who leads the procession in a mad whirl of gay living, Miss Crawford has been finally given the chance to do that comedy characterization for which her legion of admirers have long waited.

Gable, fresh from his recent triumph with Miss Crawford in "Chained" at this time plays the role of a man who returns from a distant part of the world to marry Joan, only to find that she is about to face the altar with another. To Montgomery, the rival, falls the kind of part he plays to the hilt—the suave young bounder whom you should lose patience with and can't.

With a star in each corner of the romantic triangle, the plot is based largely on situations arising from the competitive tactics of the two men who are trying to win the love of the same girl.

A brilliant cast was garnered to support the stellar trio. Billie Burke plays the flibberty-jibberty society matron, a role reminiscent of her striking portrayal in "Dinner at Eight". Charles Butterfield is seen as Gable's right hand man who always says the wrong thing at the right time. Frances Drake, the former London night club star, plays the part of a woman who tries to break up the Crawford-Montgomery romance. Others in important roles include Rosalind Russell, Tom Ricketts, Arthur Treacher and Greta Meyer.

New Adrian Creations

Adrian, M. G. M.'s style expert, has created a wardrobe of gowns for Miss Crawford which promises to establish the star's reputation in which she has appeared before. Twenty-eight gorgeous costumes are shown, forecasting next season's styles.

Palsy Kelly Comedy

Thelma Todd and Palsy Kelly are appearing on the same program in their latest comedy riot "Bum Voyage". The Belle Latest News of the World, and "Rhythm on the Range" a smart, flavorful star-studded Revue will also be exhibited on the same program.

Will Rogers Leaving

Will Rogers is appearing at the Belle tonight, for the last times in "The County Chairman", plus three excellent shorts.

Trenton and Alemites Meet In Finals for City Loop Title Emerging Victors in Playoffs

Grills' Garage Easily Beaten by Trenton 10-6 on Round

SOUTH END TIES

Hold Alemites 4-4 One Game But Lose Round 6-5

Trenton and Alemites qualified to meet in the final play-off series of the Belleville city hockey league, when the Alemites held the S.E.A.C. to a four-all tie, to win the round by the score of 6 to 5, while the Trenton squad swept the Grills' Garage sextette before them to not only overcome a one goal lead, but defeat the "Mechanics" by the score of 8 to 3 and win the round to the tune of 10 to 6. Both games were played at the Belleville Arena before a fair showing of spectators last night.

The Alemite-S.E.A.C. game proved the more thrilling of the two as the "South Enders" tried in vain to over-take the Alemites, who had gained a one goal advantage from a previous game. The "lubricants" scored first in the initial frame to elevate themselves, two up and from then on seemed satisfied to successfully hold their one goal advantage. The S.E.A.C. kids carried the play practically all evening, but inability to penetrate the Alemite defence and inability to score, when in position so to do, cost them the chances of victory.

Lead by Roy Covert and Carl Morgan, the Alemites played a steady game, while Jim Ethier and Sinfield, in the nets, carried the bulk of the rear guard work with Lee looking the best of the alternates used by the victors. Cliff Howie and McCreary starred for the losing S.E.A.C. team as Hinton, Pete Morgan, Card and Pepper all played stellar hockey for the Foster Ward kids. Ethier opened the scoring and four more counters were registered in a free scoring first period, that saw the Alemites leading 3 to 2 as the middle frame opened. On a beautiful solo effort by McCreary, who passed to Pete Morgan at the goal mouth, the S.E.A.C. knotted the count three all in the second frame for the only scoring in evidence. Carl Morgan for Alemites and "Pete" Morgan for the S.E.A.C. each bulged the twine in the last frame. The S.E.A.C. bombarded Sinfield without results in the last portion of the third period.

The line-ups—Alemite—Goal, Sinfield, defence, Rigby and J. Ethier, centre, Covert; wings, Carl Morgan, H. Morgan; subs: Lee, Ridley, Hammett, Gilbert and Wilkins.

S.E.A.C.—Goal, Hinton; defence Green and Bentley; centre, Howie; wings, Pete Morgan, Ran Card. Subs: High, McCreary and Pepper.

Summary

1st Period—
Alemite, Ethier, (Rigby) 7.41
S.E.A.C., McCreary 14.01

Trenton Win Easily

After scoring one goal in the initial frame to tie the score on the round, the Trenton entry went on to literally swept the Grills' Garage squad before them and win by the score of 8 to 3. Poor shooting, coupled with marvelous work by Goalie Joe Gould, in the third period, cost the "Mechanics" the right to be in the league finals, as the losers continually carried the play, but without avail. The visiting Trenton squad played a waiting game, forcing the Grills to carry the play in towards the Trenton defence and then breaking away to coast in on the unprotected Buskard and mount the score. At the end of the second frame the count stood 4 to 2 for Trenton, while the full-time count was 8 to 3.

Roy Smith with three goals, Jack Kidd with two, Lott, Mattis and Rosenplot were the red light flashers for the victors, while Barriage scored two for Grills and Ethier bagged the odd one. The defence of Smith and Lott went well for the winners as Kidd and Rosenplot played inspired hockey on the front line with Mattis, Miller and Lamore turning in fine performances throughout. Ethier, Semark and Weir all played good hockey at times for the losers as Cy Barriage starred as the best player on the ice, tossed over the boards by either team. Trenton and Alemite now meet in the city league finals.

The line-ups — Trenton, Goal; Gould; defence, Smith and Lott; centre, Kidd; wings, Rosenplot and Wells. Subs: Mattis, Lamore, Miller and Harvey. Grills— Goal, Buskard, defence, Henn and Ethier; centre, Barriage; wings, St. Denis, McGuire. Subs: Semark, Canning, Connors and Weir.

(Day By Day)

About ten days ago, accompanied by four youthful companions, George W. Pepper, local motorcycle rider and racer, set out by motor car for Jacksonville, Florida, hawling behind them in a trailer two motorcycles, one a racer type owned and equipped by Pepper. The object of this excursion or jaunt was to have Pepper enter in the North American Motorcycle Federation's annual 200-mile race, staged near Jacksonville. The party landed in Jacksonville without incident and Pepper's machine tuned up for the big event, which was to see some of the best riders in the world in competition. Sunday, the day of the race arrived, and young Pepper, a mere youth, hopped aboard his machine and proceeded to give some of the world's crack motorcylists a lesson in dirt track racing. Pepper was well up with the leaders and leading his share of the time, when, "zowie" off blew the filler cap of his gas tank. One hazard after another happened to impede Pepper's progress when a gasoline line broke, necessitating repeated stops for filling purposes. Originally Pepper had arranged to carry sufficient gas to assure only one stop for gas and oil during the entire race. When the gas spilled out of the filler cap and the one line broke, Pepper was constantly in trouble, but he kept doggedly on and battled against great odds to finish third in one of the world's outstanding machine speed tests.

The chief accomplishments of George Pepper was the fact, that he finished the race in third position, the first time a foreign rider ever finished in the prize money of this annual event. The showing made by Pepper was indeed an excellent one, especially under such adverse driving conditions as prevailed, when Pepper's machine failed to function properly. Roddy Rodenberg, an Indianapolis garage mechanic, finished first as only about twenty of the original sixty-seven starters crossed the finishing tape, so gruelling was the pace set. George Pepper is a charter member of the local Quinte Motorcycle Club whose members today are jubilant over the success enjoyed by their fellow member during such a world-wide event. Directly following the race, Pepper dispatched a night letter to his mother here in Belleville, informing her of both his good and also his adverse fortune during the 200-mile dash.

All of the lads to accompany Pepper on his 2,000 mile trip to Florida were fellow-members in the Quinte Motorcycle Club and were Gord Chambers, Bill Doran, Hank Wallbridge, and Jack Maclean. The success of Pepper not only reflects on his good riding qualities, but also adds increased prestige to the accomplishments of the Quinte Motorcycle Club, one of the finest clubs of its kind in the Dominion.

Joe Shortt, President of the local Anglers' Association, informs us that he has completed arrangements to have some of the best game fishing pictures ever screened in Belleville for the regular monthly meeting of the club tomorrow eve at the "Y". Discussions on casting, re-stocking and the club's coming indoor casting competitions will also be on the programme. With so much newspaper controversy relating to game fishing in local waters being prevalent these days, the efforts of the local Anglers' Club is apparently bearing fruit at last. Providing sufficient exertion is exercised by the local club and it becomes a power of strength locally, there is little doubt but that better game fishing facilities would result in local waters, following protests or suggestions at the hands of a strong organization like the Belleville Anglers' Club is growing to be.

After a lengthy long distance telephone conversation with the management of the Tweed High School team, Coach Les Shiels verbally prevailed over the champions of the Trent Valley loop and convinced them that the first game of the senior C.O.S.S.A. play-downs should be played in Belleville this year, last year the locals reversed this procedure. At any rate a new hockey play-off series looms on the horizon for local puckering fans in the inter-scholastic play-downs and the first series opens at the Belleville Arena on Wednesday night, when the Tweed High School team comes to town with the return game being played at Tweed later in the week. Goals count on the round.

Wilf Cude, a sensation in goal last season for Detroit Red Wings, is the hard-luck "guy" of this Nation Hockey League campaign. Playing for Canadiens Cude had to wait until Feb. 14 for his first shut-out of the season. He hopes to get a couple more before the season ends, however.

Undoubtedly a few surprises were sprung in the final semi-final play-offs of the local city league last evening. When the Trenton aggregation stepped into town and trimmed the Grills "Mechanics" to the tune of 8 to 3 and take the round 10 to 6, a lot of hockey-minded faces were red. The Trenton victory assures them of a play-off berth for the league championship versus the Stewart-Warner-Alemite A.C., who, by the way, must have purchased an allotment of rabbit's feet before they downed the S.E.A.C. 6 to 5 on the round. The Foster Ward kids were the aggressors last night, but inability to score, when in position, proved the downfall of the S.E.A.C. On the other hand the winning Alemite were purely on the defensive, trying to protect their goal advantage, but had it not have been for Hammett's two flukey goals, and one was the softest of the night, the "lubricants" would have been out of luck. Two players stood out on the night's play, one was Cliff Howie and the other McCreary, both of the losing S.E.A.C. These lads clearly demonstrated that there are potential hockey stars.

POSSIBILITY OF TIE EXISTING

Rangers and Bruins Must Win in Order For This to Happen

(By The Canadian Press)

Lester Patrick moves his New York Rangers and their single-point leadership in the National League's American Division into Montreal tonight, while Bruins are making an effort at Boston to rob them of their hard-earned advantage.

Maroons, quite possibly Rangers' opponents in the playoffs, present a problem for the New Yorkers, who must defeat them to be sure of retaining their narrow margin. Should they lose and Bruins beat St. Louis Eagles the teams managed by the brothers Patrick, Lester and Frank, would be tied again.

Stew Evans, out of the game for a week with a skate cut, will return to the Maroon lineup but Tommy Gorman's team will be lacking another star defenceman, Lionel Conacher. The big train is in Toronto nursing a broken thumb.

New York Americans, who still have a chance for a playoff spot, and Detroit Red Wings, who are conceded none whatever, clash at New York in the third game of the night.

Toronto Leafs and Black Hawks were scheduled to meet in Chicago tonight but the game was played earlier in the season on Hawks' request.

SMART HOCKEY IN CENTRE LOOP

West Huntingdon Takes One Goal Lead From Glen Ross

Stirling— West Huntingdon took a one goal lead in the first game of their home and home series with Glen Ross. Real fine hockey was displayed by both teams in this semi final fixture before a large crowd of fans. These final games should be sell outs and very likely will be by the time the championship is decided. The odds were about five to four in favor of West Huntingdon before the game started, but the wise boys were giving odds on Glen Ross before the game was over. Even though West Huntingdon go into the last game with a one goal lead, and are champions of last year, some of the more rabid Glen Ross supporters are willing to give odds that West Huntingdon will be defeated in the next game. Every kind of hockey was played on Thursday night. Fast and tricky combination plays, individual rushes. Even the fans who like it rough were satisfied. In spite of the fact that good clean hockey is the present day demand of the public, there are still those who like a bit of the old-fashioned (knock 'em down and drag 'em out style of play).

Line-Up

Glen Ross—Goal, Hagerman; defence, Brown and Armstrong; centre Fraser; wings, Roy Brooks and G. Fraser. Subs: Scott, H. Brooks and Pyear.

West Huntingdon—Goal, Sarles; defence, McGowan brothers; centre Mott; wings, Kerby and Wright. Subs: Thompson, Cook, Bray and Moran.

L.O.L. No. 110, Stirling, entertained the I.O.O.F. No. 239 of Stirling, to a fine social evening in their lodge room on Thursday night. The very interesting program was provided by the Oddfellows lodge under the direction of Mr. W. L. Anderson in the absence of Mr. George Weaver, who was unabel to attend because of illness.

Very interesting addresses were delivered by Dr. C. F. Walt and Mr. J. S. Morton. Mr. Alex Parks gave two very humorous readings. Mr. Robert Patterson rendered some musical numbers on his auto harp and harmonica. Mr. Harry Hulin P.G. of the I.O.O.F. gave the address of the evening, which was based on the origin and history of the order. He spoke as one with authority on the question. Dealing at length with principles and its value to Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Robert Patterson then led the gathering in community singing, during which he threatened to fine any one caught not singing. Art Duncan was the unlucky one and paid in full by singing (Union) a comic song. Mr. Charles Allen played a piano solo, and Mr. Henry Farrell sang (We'll be with you). Mr. George Luery kept the crowd in good humour with his witty stories brought in at different intervals.

As every one sat down to lunch, Mr. John Morton acted as toast master. The name of Mr. Jack West and Dr. C. F. Walt were coupled with the toast to the King. Mr. West, in his remarks, stressed the need of British subjects to look about and compare their country with other countries under dictatorship. In these times of difficulty they would be grateful for the privilege of drinking a toast to our Royal Sovereign. Dr. Walt cited instances of service enacted by soldiers in the Great War. Such service could only voluntarily be given to a Monarch so worthy as ours. We as Britishers still enjoy personal liberty that has been curtailed in such countries as Russia, Italy and Germany.

Mr. John Thompson expressed the appreciation of the I.O.O.F. for the fine gesture on the part of the Orange Lodge in extending this invitation. Functions such as these to create the desired fellowship of both organizations. Mr. Mason Clarke of Belleville, also spoke at this time. Mr. Robert Eggleton, a member of the Orange Order for Fifty-nine years, responded to the toast to the Orange Association along with Mr. E. Morrow. The remainder of the evening was spent in card playing.

The many friends of Miss Pauline Jackman will be sorry to learn of her illness.

Mrs. Eric Lovell and son, Jackie, have been in bed this week suffering from 'flu.

A fairly large crowd of hockey fans from Stirling attended the Peterboro-Campbellford game in Campbellford on Friday night.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Eggleton returned home after spending a few days in Toronto on business. While there they also visited friends.

Mr. Mason Clarke of Belleville, has been in Stirling for the past week on business.

Mrs. Herman Lloyd spent a few days at the home of her brother, Mr. Perry Bronson.

The local Boy Scouts attended the pancake supper at Ivanhoe on Friday night, Feb. 22nd. The program was provided and directed by the troop.

Mrs. Ed. Good of Thomasburg, has returned home after spending a few days with her sister, Mrs. Robert Christie, Church street.

Some of the prize winners at the Stirling carnival, journeyed to Frankford on Friday night with hopes, no doubt of repeating the hit they made here.

GEORGE SELKIRK SIGNS CONTRACT

Likely to Take Spot in Right Field Vacated by Ruth

(By Sam Robertson, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

New York, Feb. 26 (CP)—New York Yankees had the signed contract today of slugging George Selkirk and, if need be, the answer to the question mark born of Babe Ruth's uncertain frame of mind.

While no one seemed to know if the Babe would heed the order, that he prove at the training camp the ability of his aging legs to patrol rightfield again, it was said Manager Joe McCarthy knew he would be satisfied to have Mr. Selkirk from Canada filling the Ruthian shoes.

Giving things a kite into the air was a report, that the Babe declared in an informal chat yesterday he had decided to play baseball several more years. The success he had in poling out long ones during his recent tour in Japan was said to have convinced him there was no truth in the saying, that "the old gray mare isn't what she used to be."

But come what may, Selkirk seemed certain of a place in the Yankee garden, at left or centre if the Bambino should come to terms.

McCarthy and a lot of American League pitchers were deeply impressed, when the raw-boned big fellow from Huntsville, Ont., ambled over to New York from the International League late last season. George played 46 games in a Yankee uniform and over that stretch whaled the ball at a .313 clip, while committing but one error afield.

He stood up boldly at the plate, as though he had used one to cut his first teeth on, and put into every swing the ample shoulder muscles, wrestling at high school gave him. His hitting power and accuracy ran up five homers, seven doubles and a triple among his 55 safeties.

The contract he sent to Yankee headquarters yesterday showed his full name is George Alexander Selkirk and that he is 27 years old. George was only six, when his father wound up his affairs as a contractor and moved the family from Huntsville to Rochester, N.Y.

George played amateur baseball there, while also starring as a 220-yard sprinter on the high school track team. It was because of the speed in his nimble legs, that he was taken from his first job as a catcher and sent out to the field to chase fly balls.

Behind him is service with the Columbus American Association Club, and Rochester, Toronto, Jersey City and Newark of the International. His record always has been good, but he is confident his best years are ahead of him.

"I'm in the Major League for keeps," he said recently.

PLAYOFF BERTHS NOT DECIDED IN TRENTON LEAGUE

Playoffs For Group Title Will Start in a Week

POSITIONS CHANGE

Wooler And Brighton Almost Assured of Places

TRENTON, Feb. 26.—(Special) One more week and the Trenton and District Hockey League will be ready for the play-offs. After Monday night's games the four teams, that will meet in the semi-finals will be almost assured, but of course anything may happen in hockey. Wooler moved back into second place on Friday night, when they white-washed the Cities Service 12-0, to spoil their chances of a play-off berth. The second game was won by the Cottons when they defeated The Carrying Place 5-3 in overtime. The night-cap game of the triple-header ended in a 5-4 decision for the Benedict-Proctor after a hard fight with Smithfield. The win placed the Benedict-Proctor in 4th place, one point ahead of the Cottons and The Carrying Place.

In the opening game Wooler showed the fans, that it will take a good team to eliminate them in the Trenton and District Hockey finals. They simply ran away from the Cities Service sextette and in the last frame they ran in a total of six goals. The first period ended 2-0 and in the second the Woolerites doubled that amount. For the winners the three Ruttans, Roy Smith, McCall and Steenburg looked the best. Anderson, Miller, Waldron, and Hutchison played well for the Cities Service, but were checked to a standstill by their opponents.

Cottons, 5; Carrying Place 3

With the game almost in the bag, The Carrying Place, who were without the services of Norm Johnson, their ace, could not hold a 3-1 lead and the Cottons banged in 2 counters to tie the game and in the overtime Leo Coughlin bagged two for a win for the Cottons. The old veteran John Anderson, drilled a hot one from the side at the opening of the second period to start the fireworks after the first period went scoreless. Bun Lott evened the count, when he back-handed the rubber past LaMore in front of a scramble. Ferguson put the Canal boys in the lead as the period closed when he shot one from the defence. A few seconds after the opening of the third stanza, Ferguson made it 3-1 for The Carrying Place and it looked like the game was in the bag. Manager Latour put the boys on the defensive while the Cottons were pushing with a five man forward attack. Midway through the period Bun Lott took Coughlin's pass and the Cotton fans cheered their team on. The Carrying Place was shooting the puck down the ice and with one minute to go the players were subbed and the score tied when Ted Roberts batted in Bruce Burtt's rebound. With victory so close and then to have the score tied, The Carrying Place seemed to lose heart and the Cottons scored 2 to win 5-3. Coughlin, Bun Lott, Drake, Burtt and Roberts were the choice of the winners, with Willie, Ferguson, and Anderson being the pick of the losers.

Benedict-5, Smithfield-4

Minaker's Smithfield Sextette checked the Benedict-Proctor so closely, that it took sixty minutes hard fighting for the Benedicts to eke out a 5-4 decision. The silver-platers scored two soon after the opening bell, when Wallace and Vandervoort bulged the twine. H. Hansen batted one in from a scramble shortly before the close of the period for Smithfield's first tally. The same lad evened the score in the second, when he took a pass from behind the net that beat Cottrell. Norman Wells broke loose to score on a solo effort and minutes later tallied again, when he took a perfect pass from Buck Wallace. Smithfield shoved every man ahead in the third frame and Russel Teale scored a soft one from the blue line. Sim Mattis made it five for the silver-plate, when he took a pass from Bill Miller. Beale drew a penalty, when he tripped Bedal as he went in on Cottrell alone, to save an almost sure goal. Niddery scored for Smithfield but they could not get the equalizer before the final bell. Lemoire and Grant teamed well on the Smithfield defence with H. Hansen, Niddery. Davis and the Teale brothers doing the best on the forward line. Each man on the silver-platers put all he had into the game and no stars could be picked.

LOVE SCHOOL

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

"Now? Tonight?" Faith's lovely grey eyes widened. From where she stood she could see the balcony. Paul was alone out there, leaning on the railing, staring into the night. "I'll have to pack a bag," she murmured. "And there's Mary—" Faith felt suddenly as if she were being torn up by the roots again.

As if she had heard her name, Mary appeared in the doorway. "Wont you and Mr. Barclay come in and join us" she pleasantly suggested.

"I'm going away with Hunter tonight," Faith said in a still, small voice, and ran to the older woman's arms.

Nothing ever disturbed Mary Allan's poise. "Why ,that's very nice for you, dear," she said brightly, but her arms tightened around Faith. "I've grown very fond of this child, Mr. Barclay," she told Hunter.

"I'm sure that Mrs. Barclay appreciates your kindness," he said with formal courtesy. "If you will excuse us—" He stood blocked out in his blacks and whites against the piles of wraps.

"Certainly. I'll help you pack, Faith dear. A bag will do for tonight, won't it?" Miss Allan's fine brown eyes were cool.

Hunter and Mary didn't like each other, Faith thought wretchedly, following her friend into the bedroom. Neither of them spoke while Faith fumbled among drawers and the closet. She never could have collected her things if it hadn't been for Mary.

"Here's your wrap, dear." Mary helped her on with the short white satin coat that went with her pretty gown. Then Faith was in her arms again, half sobbing.

"What a little fool I am!" Faith tried to smile through her tears. "I wanted Hunter moer than anything else in the world and now he's here—I'm scared."

"Everything's going to be all right.' Mary patted her shoulder. "Run along now, dear. I judge," she added rather drily, "that your young man doesn't like to be kept waiting."

"I'll see you often." Faith's lips still quivered. "Will you say goodnight to Paul for me? Tell him we will have lots more times together."

But she knew they wouldn't. There was a sense of finality about leaving a place grown very dear to her in such a short time. She looked up at the lights in the old house before she climbed into the low, shining coupe that waited in the dim old street. The very way the liveried chauffeur closed the door of the car seemed to shut out Mary and Paul. "No, thank you," she murmured, as Hunter offered her a cigarette. Lit one himself.

They drove in silence across a bridge and along the fairy necklace of lights up the Champs Elysees. Faith's heart began to race again. She glanced at Hunter's profile in the passing flicker of lights. How magnificent he was in his top hat and the faultless white and black of his evening clothes! The air was sweet with Spring scents. Couples strolled through the shadows of the Avenue. And the magic of Paris was upon Faith.

Hunter shifted in his seat to throw his cigarette out of the window. "Who was the artistic looking fellow reclining at your feet when I came in?" His tone was indifferent.

Faith leaned forward, shimmering gold from the velvet shadows. "Oh, that was Paul Tuckerman, an inventor," she said eagerly. "He and Mary have been wonderful to me. They're frightfully clever. I've learned a lot from them about art—and things."

"I dare say". Hunter didn't sound enthusiastic. "I've often wondered," he went on in his low, well-bred voice, "why people think that only geniuses live in studios, and why so-called bohemia is supposed to be so romantic. I know a few artist chaps who are fairly decently tailored, and their work is good, too."

"Mary isn't a bohemian the way you mean it," Faith flared back. He was thinking of Greenwich Village and the cheap people she had played around with there, of course. He would never forget that, and finding her in a studio here, he must think——

He looked amused. "You're loyal to your friends, aren't you?" He smiled down at her. "Well, here we are, young lady."

Faith forgave him and smiled back. They had stopped before a narrow grey house with Louis XV windows and wrought-iron trimmings, on a short, smooth-looking street.

"We're right around the corner from the Bois de Boulogne," Hunter said, and with a slight wave of dismissal took Faith's bag from the chauffeur.

Faith drew a quick breath as they passed into a stone outer hallway up shallow steps to a plate-glass door and into the hush of a light grey inner hall. Hunter had called out his name as they went by the concierge's loge, where the guardian of these apartments never apparently, slept so soundly that she couldn't press the button of the front door and listen for a familiar voice.

It was more like a private house. And it had that peculiar feel and atmosphere of luxury with which Hunter was always surrounded.

They stood very close together in the small self-starting elevator. What an intimate little box for two, Faith thought, slipping back her soft white satin wrap. Her perfume sifted delicately through the hushed air, and though she didn't look at him, she felt Hunter's eyes in her flawless skin and the lowered fringe of her lashes.

Since they had left Mary Allan's place, his manner had changed to an easier, pleasanter mood. He was on this own terrain. "I think you'll find it comfortable here," he said following her into the rather severe splendor of rooms where every hanging, every piece of furniture had been combined in an effect of costly simplicity.

"I've gone in for the Empire," he said carelessly, lighting up the green and white lamps of the large Salon. Green and white and mahogany, old brown books and prints "I'll get servants tomorrow, and you can do as you like, of course, about changing things."

"It's all perfect!" Faith cried, feeling suddenly happy and excited. What girl wouldn't be? In this heavenly place with Hunter. His mouth had the cutest trick of quirking up at the corners when he was pleased. And he was pleased now.

He wasn't going to be glum and serious, Faith thought forgetting that she had ever been worried or frightened. She knew that Hunter watched her as she drifted lightly about the room, a slender shining figure in her high waisted white satin that swung in soft folds to her little feet.

Then quickly, almost brusquely, he turned away. "Let's have a nightcap," he suggested. "Then I'll show you your quarters. You understand, of course," he said slowly, "our original agreement stands. This is a business arrangement that engages neither of us——"

"I'd love a drink, and I understand," Faith answered demurely. She wouldn't let anything he said spoil the beautiful fairy tale she was telling herself. "And so the Princess found her Prince Charming again," she murmured, half aloud. "And they lived happily ever after."

"What did you say?" Hunter swung about on the point of leaving the room to get whatever they needed for the nightcap.

"Nothing." Faith laughed up at him, standing at his shoulder.

He looked down at the pale starry radiance of her, the gleam of her shoulders and hair.

Neither of them moved, and the air vibrated between them with an odd humming and drumming in Faith's ears. A tightness like a band seemed laid across her breasts. Hunter's eyes were blue flames against the slashing black of his brows.

"God, you're lovely," he said unsteadily. His head jutted forward.

Faith felt languor in the nape of her neck, in her knees. She swayed with a flutter of draperies. Hunter's arms closed around her with a fierce crushing sweep, locking her to him. His lips moved slowly like fire, closing her eyes, reaching her lips. A short stabbing pain shot through her as she yielded to the hard clasp of his arms .Then everything else was blotted out but the sweetness and madness of being loved.

SAD AWAKENING

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

When Faith woke, a gilt cupid clock on the mantlepiece pointed to nine in the morning. She was in bed in a rose and white room. Drowsily, her hand groped out. Hunter wasn't there beside her.

She sat up, staring about. The sun poured through long pink taffeta curtains looped with wreaths of rosebuds. A lace and pink taffeta dressing table, ruffled and billowing like a skirt, stood opposite the bed that was old gold painted with fat little cupids and pink ribbons. The carpet was a lovely white woolly thing with big roses scattered on it, and there were white roses and violets in crystal vases on the mantlepiece and on a small table by a gilded chaise longue. It was the most beautiful bedroom Faith had ever seen.

Faith's cheeks matched the taffeta as she looked at her white satin dress of the night before flung over a chair. The lace and sheer pink chiffon of her pajama costume had slipped from her shoulder. Mechanically she readjusted it.

Hunter had left her sometime during the night. She tried to feel that that was as it should be. He would never be the sort of husband, she thought, who would turn marriage into a homely routine. But she wanted terribly to see him. It was so strange, after weeks of doubt and turmoil to have entered into the miracle of her honeymoon. He loved her, she told herself over and over again.

She lay back closing her eyes to savor the starting new joy that had come into her life. Only yesterday she had been adrift, dependent on Mary Allan's friendship and on Paul as a companion. How different it was today!

She stirred under the delicious feel of embroidered sheets, silk covers. No use deceiving herself. There was still a long way to go before she could feel secure. Girls who had fought their way up from nothing as she had, had a lot to learn. She wouldn't be welcome in Hunter's world where women like Gertrude Stevens, who knew all the ropes, held their men by other means than beauty. You had to be clever and sophisticated, and had to have read books and seen plays.

Faith was slipping out of bed when a knock sounded on the door. She hurried beneath the covers a hand to the silvery gold of her hair.

But it wasn't Hunter. It was an elderly man in the hornet striped vest and black trousers of a French servant's morning livery. He carried a tray and his long features were curled in smiles bearing out the truth that all the word, and above all a Frenchman, loves a lover.

"Le petit rejeune 'rde Madame," he said as gallantly as if he had doffed a plumed hat. "Madame me permets?"

French was one of the first things she must learn, Faith decided. At her nod and gesture, he set down the tray, vanished, returning with a short legged folding table which, with a flourish, he placed on the bed.

Faith smiled at him, shaking her head at a flow of language she gathered that his name was Leon-at-her-service.

He poured coffee from a Sevres pot, lifted the cover from a jar of honey, and hovered by until Faith indicated that all was well. She was growing accustomed to these French breakfasts of coffee and hot milk, and horse shoe shaped rolls as light as pastry with thin round pats of unsalted butter. This morning she was very hungry, and would have liked eggs if she had known how to ask for them.

So old Leon bowed himself out. And an hour later, fresh and exquisite in a pink silk knitted suit, Faith stepped into the living room. here could Hunter be, she wondered. In this life of unfamiliar rules, she didn't know quite what was expected of her.

There were no signs of Hunter, but on the flat mahogany desk lay an opened cable. Faith tiptoed closer to it, drawn as to a magnet. There was something urgent about a cable. It might be bad news. Perhaps it explained Hunter's absence.

She had to find out. Why he had probably left it there for her to read.

Then blood drained from Faith's cheeks, her hands clenched, her nails biting into her palms as she bent over the slip. Hunter had never meant her to read this. It was from Gertrude Stevens.

"How could you run off like that," it ran. "Am joining you as soon as can make arrangements. Love, Gertrude."

With murderous thoughts surged through Faith. What right had that woman to follow up Hunter! A wicked scheming woman, Faith thought furiously. Snatching at Hunter just when she, Faith, seemed to have gained happiness.

A slight sound from behind, whirled her around, the hot color flashing back to her cheeks. She must look like a thief caught stealing.

Hunter stood in the doorway, the picture of a gentleman who has been strolling at the fashionable hour in the Bois de Boulogne. White carnation in morning coat, striped trousers, black and white striped scarf tie.

There was no sign of the lover about him as he advanced into the room coldly glancing from her to the crumpled cable she still held in her nerveless hand.

"Good morning," he said formally with the faintest lift of his black brows.

Cry of Gold Again Rings Out as Rush To Lake Athabasca Strike Area Begins

'Area Rich in Yellow Metal Now Being Staked

By H. E. HAMMOND
Central Press Canadian Writer

Edmonton, Alta., Feb. 26.—The yellow metal which has been the inspiration of the greatest developments in the mining industry still is the magic lure of the prospector, the miner and the financier.

Gold is where you find it; and it has been found at Lake Athabaska, in northern Saskatchewan, with assays running in the high figure of $1.80 per ton.

When a veritable army of geologists, mining engineers and prospectors commence operations on the 1,200 mineral claims now staked at Beaverlodge Point, Lake Athabasca discovery, in the spring, one of the greatest prospective gold fields in Canada will go into development.

Gold strikes that area, first reported late in the summer of 1934, will be given one of the greatest "counting over" operations yet seen in the north. This minute survey will no doubt have an important bearing on the future of the field.

In the opinion of one mining authority the mineral areas of the north were the biggest thing that had ever happened in them. The authority has asserted that the same formation that exists at Great Bear lake extends from that point through Slave lake down to Lake Athabaska Lac la Ronge and right along into Ontario.

The mineral resources of Canada's great north country are enormous and while the Great Bear lake mineral territory is particularly in a class by itself in the richness of its silver, radium, cobalt, bismuth and copper deposits, the Lake Athabaska discovery promises indications of fabulously rich gold-bearing ore.

Expect Big Rush

It is predicted that within the next three or four weeks there will be increasing evidence of developments in the Lake Athabaska area. There are already four places where free gold is being shown, while one drilling outfit is down 90 feet, has a shift of some 30 men and is reported to be working 24 hours a day.

At least three and possibly four diamond drilling outfits will be under way there this spring and summer, in addition to a lot of other prospecting. However, the men who have been going in for the past few weeks are mostly "snow skaters". That is they are staking over the snow and trusting to luck that they will be on good ground when the spring thaws enable them to see what they have. The real miners will not be going in in any great numbers until March, but a big rush is anticipated just as soon as the spring break-up enables aeroplanes to land there safely on pontoons.

Gus Nyman, pioneer trapper and prospector of the northland, was the original discoverer of the Lake Athabaska field. It was Nyman who last summer brought out specimens of ore which caused such a furore among mining men both in Edmonton and Eastern Canada.

Send In Government Men

Nyman has a lease option on his original claims which will be worked during this spring by one of the biggest development concerns in the Dominion.

Lake Mines Ltd., and the Consolidated Smelters are two of the big operators mentioned here as making extensive plans for the coming summer, in addition the Saskatchewan government is putting in a field organization this spring with the object of getting the fullest possible data on the new field.

One mining company has been operating a diamond drill on their claims for the past four weeks. So great is the interest they are taking in the field that the drilling machinery was taken in by aeroplane last September, and is being operated in three shifts over the 24 hours. It is understood that the company acquired a further group of claims quite recently, paying $150,000 to a trapper in the district for his interests.

At least six eastern syndicates contemplate extensive development work in the spring and crews of men are now in the territory erecting the necessary work camps from which operations will be directed.

Use Aeroplanes and Dogs

Aeroplanes and dog teams are taking new recruits to the field every week. Geologists and engineers from eastern Canada come in for a short time, then go out again to be followed by others who immediately start erection of log huts on claims on which inspections were made before the snow came.

Other eastern companies planning extensive development work are: Lee Gold Company, McVittie-Graham Mines, Ltd., Ashley Gold Company, Bobjo Company, and the Locan ors Limited (Toronto) a powerful syndicate headed by Joseph Errington.

Leading the western syndicates will be the North-West Minerals Ltd., which company will start active work on their 45 claims as soon as weather permits. A crew of men under a well-known mining engineer and geologist will be sent in to rock trench across the claims and sample thoroughly. It is said that exploration work already undertaken disclosed high grade values.

A crew of men will be employed in trenching and pitting gold-bearing claims of Great Bear Lake Mines, while other known occurrences will be actively explored. The party will also take in assaying equipment and if results are satisfactory a mining plant will be sent in after the opening of navigation.

RETIRE BLOCK OF NATIONAL DEBT IS SUGGESTION

Ian Mackenzie Says it Can be Done With New Money Issue

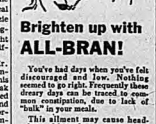
HELP UNEMPLOYMENT

Sir George Perley is Speaker for Government On Debate

OTTAWA, Feb. 26.—(CP)—Retirement of a large block of Canada's National debt by a gigantic issue of new money to the possible extent of $400,000,000 is a suggestion before the House of Commons today, advanced by Hon. Ian Mackenzie Liberal member for Vancouver Centre. Leader of an Opposition attack on the Government on the score of its alleged failure to deal with unemployment Mr. Mackenzie last night threw out a series of suggestions which he believed might lead Canada out of its economic difficulties.

In advancing his proposals Mr. Mackenzie said he spoke for himself and not necessarily for his party, but he did profess to speak for his party, when he denounced Prime Minister R. B. Bennett and his ministers for failure to elaborate a satisfactory policy on unemployment.

Mr. Mackenzie was supported by Hon. W. Gray (Lib., Lambton West) who ascribed the sweatshop conditions revealed by the Mass Purdy probe to the Government's High Tariff policy.



Sir George Perley, veteran Parliamentarian, was leading the Government at the time and set out to answer Mr. Mackenzie. He said the Liberal spokesman, "swept by his personal ideas as 'new leader of the Liberal Party" told the same old story that Liberals had been telling for years. It was a story of continual criticism and obstruction with not a single constructive suggestion. The Liberals regularly supported such governmental measures as the employment Insurance and then set out to criticize them.

Mr. Mackenzie launched his attack by way of an amendment to the Government motion to go into committee of supply. His move was, in effect a motion of want of confidence, as it declared the Government had failed to evolve an effective policy in connection with unemployment.

More to Participate

The end of the Mackenzie move was not in sight today. Several more speakers will likely participate in a debate which today drew one of the hottest of the session. Today the House will continue either with Farm Loan Act Amendments or the Mackenzie motion.

The issue of new currency the Western Liberal proposed would be used only for retirement of debt and not for any temporary projects. His other suggestions included a National commission to deal with unemployment, an Imitial Public Works scheme, extension of Dominion and Foreign trade, reduction of interest rates on all outstanding obligations in Canada; negotiation with foreign holders of Canadian securities with a view to a mutually satisfactory arrangement for lower interest rates, a strictly balanced budget, a conference with the provinces with a view to evolving some system of Brighten up with ALL-BRAN!

You've had days when you've felt discouraged and low. Nothing seemed to go right. Frequently these dreary days can be traced to common constipation. Due to lack of "bulk" in your meals.

This ailment may cause headaches and that "all-in" feeling. Correct it by eating a delicious cereal.

Laboratory research shows Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides "bulk" to aid elimination. ALL-BRAN also furnishes vitamin B and food-iron.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN retains digestive fluids better than the fiber in fruits and vegetables. It is gentle—and often more effective. Isn't this tasty and food better than taking patent medicines—often harmful?

Two tablespoonfuls of ALL-BRAN daily are usually sufficient. With each meal, in chronic cases. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

Dionne's Tour Ends and Parents Start for Home

Indianapola, Feb. 26.—(AP)—Their brief tour of stage appearances at an end, Papa and Mama Oliva Dionne, parents of Canada's famous quintuplets, today were enroute to Corbeil, their other five children in their Callander, Ont., home and to visit the five little girls in the hospital built for their Quints.

They did no comment before their departure on a move by David Croll, Ontario Minister of Welfare, to have guardianship of the babies given to his Department.

However, Olivo Dionne reiterated his hope they might visit their five daughters "not as strangers but as father and mother".

He and Leo Kervin, tour manager, have personal arrangements under which they contend the rest of the family has not received a fair share of financial returns attached to the fame of the quintuplets.

Fond Du Lac, Wis., Feb. 26.—A Fond Du Lac thousand dollars is a little too much, Mrs. R. P. Wiese said today, to pay for a visit of her relatives even though they are the famous Dionnes.

A first cousin of the father of the famous quintuplets, Mrs. Wiese took advantage of the parents' visit to the Middle West and invited them to spend some time here.

"I am disappointed," Mrs. Wiese, the former Rosella Dionne of Appleton, Wis., said. "The Dionnes, so near us in Chicago on a personal appearance tour, could not come here. Their agenda, or publicity man, wrote us saying they couldn't come for there was no money in the plan for the outing. It is a trip. For $1,000 they would have visited us, provided a theatre appearance before the public had been arranged.

Patriarch of 'Green Pastures' Ready For 1653rd Performance on Broadway

By MAX HILL
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Fe. 26.—(AP)—Richard B. Harrison, benign patriarch of "The Green Pastures," his black frock coat pressed by five years of hard use, came back to Broadway for the 1,652rd performance of $3,000,000 opium that once went begging for a producer.

"I don't act—De Lawd says more, I live it," said Harrison, native of London, Ont. A few minutes later as he and 74 other negro actors went through their paces in a final dress rehearsal for the author, Roark Bradford, and the dramatist who prepared the material for the stage, Marc Connolly. The formal opening is tomorrow night.

There will be but three weeks in New York before the cast, after five years of presentations in Canada and 40 states, disbands for the season, as Harrison's wife and Marian Harrison, their daughter, are ill in Hinsdale Sanitarium near Chicago. Next autumn the show will play Boston, Chicago and Philadelphia again.

Harrison, who is 70 years old, looks forward to the future with optimism, and the hope, that he can establish a school of drama for negroes in Greensboro, N. C. The school would be at the Agricultural and Technical College there.

"There is a lot of talent and a chance to portray negroes as they are," he said. "They can write plays, let them be ever so crude to start with, and we can produce them. The best points of the negro haven't been brought out yet. It takes a negro to write about a negro."

Guard is Mysteriously Shot In Bullion Yard in London

London, Feb. 27 (AP)—A 20-year-old Welsh soldier standing guard in one of the key sentry posts in the bullion yard of the Bank of England was mysteriously shot and mortally wounded in the early morning darkness today.

Police and military authorities declined to comment on whether the guardsman's death was the act of accident or suicide but it was understood one cartridge was missing from the victim's ammunition belt.

Authorities said the dead man was James Baker.

The slaying which settles over the city, London's financial district, after the thousands who thronged the section during the day depart at nightfall, was broken shortly before dawn by the crack of a rifle shot.

"Turn out the guard," shouted a sergeant of the guard as he rushed to Baker's post at the main gate of the bullion yard near Threadneedle street.

Baker was found lying on the ground, blood pouring from a bullet wound in his head. He died shortly afterwards in a hospital.

Baker, 20 years old, unmarried, had been in the army only a year. He was a member of the Prince of Wales Company, crack military organization, dressed in a picturesque uniform of red coat, black trousers and beaver busby.

The Bank of England has been guarded nightly by a detail composed of an officer, a sergeant, two corporals, 24 men and a bugler since the institution was threatened by an infuriated mob during the Gordon riots in 1780.

At Windsor the increase was over 100,000, while Fort Erie showed a increase of about 40,000 and Niagara Falls showed an increase of about 6,000.

SIX EXECUTIONS HAVE TAKEN PLACE

Last Hanging in County Almost 44 Years Ago

Six times in the history of the County of Hastings has the death penalty been imposed and carried out, the last hanging to be witnessed in this county being that of James Kane, sentenced to death by hanging following the murder-ing of his wife on March 3rd, 1891. Kane was hanged on May 21st of the same year.

Twice previously in this present century has the death sentence been passed in local county proceedings to the sentencing of Harold W. Vermilyea yesterday. Some twenty-five years ago, Robert Parker, Hungerford, was sentenced to death by Judge Moull, but after the scaffold had been erected the sentence was commuted to life in prison, on the eve of the impending execution. About 14 years ago, Morris Barry received the death sentence on a charge of shooting his employer, Judge Moull, but after the scaffold had been erected the sentence was commuted to life in prison.

Those who have paid the penalty by hanging in Belleville were:

Thomas Barnhardt, executed 1854.

Peter Rock, hanged June 13th, 1859.

Richard and Mary Aylward hanged December 8th, 1862. (Last public hanging).

Peter Davis hanged June 20th, 1890.

James Kane, hanged May 21st 1891.

Story Published in Outside Papers Given Undoubted Denial

Harold W. eVrmilyea, who under the sentence of death for the hatchet murder of his mother sits seemingly nonchalant in his cell awaiting the display that continued air of indifference, will be allowed to exercise perhaps one day in the lengthy corridor which faces his cell, according to a statement made last by Gaol Governor G. H. French today.

"We keep the prisoners in his wing locked tightly, as ordered by the court, but sometime tomorrow, or next week in the afternoon he will be permitted to stretch his legs and get some exercise," said Mr. French. He stated Gaoler French as he stated that the other remaining criminals now would be placed in the corridor and requested to keep the doors of the cells on the door of the condemned man's cell at all times in order to have him under constant surveillance.

"I see no difference in Vermilyea's actions since his trial, but he continues to present that air of indifference which he displayed when he stated another gaol official.

When questioned relating to the rumors spread on the street and in Toronto papers relative to alleged disturbances and outbreak by the prisoners, who was reported to have threatened the life of Gaoler French in his cell and to have broken furniture and personal clothing, Gaoler French definitely denied the truth of any such rumors. "Vermilyea, at no time created a disturbance nor did he break or smash any of the fixtures in the jail," stated Gaoler French as he explained that it was impossible for him (Vermilyea) to have wrecked the prison property as he was placed in a cell alone by his guards after his trial and had not been out since. There is no blankets or fixtures, except an iron bed in each cell.

"Perhaps the ridiculous story got out through some prisoner taken in the prison yesterday to repair a water pipe that burst in the prison furnace room," stated Mr. French in explanation to the incident. Any contact or information received from the jail officials a water pipe was broken in the furnace room in the jail yesterday when a large volume of water poured out on a pile of wood and crashed onto the water pipe. The trouble was speedily remedied upon the arrival of the plumbers, however.

Vermilyea is reported to have spent a quiet night, having slept well, prison guards state. He rose at the usual hour as did the other prisoners at the jail and partook of the prison breakfast. He is also showing little interest in conversing with the jail staff or guards. Later this morning Vermilyea was given his first exercise period in the afternoon when he walked the length of a few minutes, but he was soon locked back in his cell.

Vessels Search in Vain For British Freighter, Disabled During Storm

SOS Calls of Blairgowrie Are Answered by Three Craft

MID-ATLANTIC GALE

All-Night Search Proves Fruitless Ships Report

London, Feb. 27.— (AP)—The fate of the British Freighter Blairgowrie, disabled by a howling mid-Atlantic gale, was a mystery today as the vessel rode two days storm battered her in vain through mountainous seas.

The failure of any of the three ships which sped to the craft's SOS to report they had reached the freighter's side gave rise to apprehension the Blairgowrie may have foundered, carrying its crew of 26 to their deaths.

The Europa, the American Banker and the S. S. Bloemendyk, a Netherlands vessel, all rushed to the position given in the Blairgowrie's distress message, but found no trace of the freighter.

Crippled Ship's Position

The crippled ship's last report gave her position as 46.30 north, 37.1 west, about 760 miles due west of Fastnet Point, in the North Atlantic ship lanes and 1,000 miles east of Newfoundland. She said her steering apparatus had been carried away and her hold was filling with water.

The Europa, 60 miles away when the SOS was heard, messaged soon after later she was on the British ship's approximate position but unable to find her.

The American Banker and the Bloemendyk also were expected to have found any trace of the crippled ship. All three were standing by awaiting better visibility with daylight.

Ships Limp to Port

One by one various other ships damaged in the storm limped or were going into port or waiting for the high winds to abate before trying to proceed.

The S.S. Karma was standing by the British steamer Hillcroft, and attempting to place a tow line on board the craft, helpless since its propeller was wrecked away in towering seas.

All-Night Search Vain

S.S. Europa at Sea, Feb. 27.— (AP)—After interrupting an SOS from the S. S. Blairgowrie we went to her assistance and arrived at the scene at 2 a.m. G.M.T. today (9 p.m. E.S.T. Tuesday).

We searched all night in company with the S. S. American Banker and the S. S. Bloemendyk without success.

The last radio message received from the Blairgowrie heard at 12.08 a.m. G.M.T. today (7.08 p.m. E.S.T. Tuesday) said she was in a hopeless position.

Reports of the hurricane was blowing. (A full force hurricane indicates a wind velocity of 75 or more miles an hour).

At 4 a.m. G.M.T. today (7 a.m. E.S.T.) the three rescuing ships discontinued their search as hope was abandoned of their further destinations.

Ships Give Up Quest

New York, Feb. 27 (AP)—Radio-marine Corporation received word today the giant liner Europa and two other ships had abandoned their search in a mid-Atlantic gale for the freighter Blairgowrie which had reported she was sinking yesterday.

The Olympic, another big liner, was due at the scene three hours later and was asked to make a search for the vessel as it passed by.

None of the masters of the three ships at work in the area at 6 p.m. throughout the night had any hope the Blairgowrie survived the hurricane which was raging.

The last report was it was turning over.

Captain of H.M.S. Renown Is Convicted of Negligence

Portsmouth, England, Feb. 27.— (CP)—Capt. H. R. Sawbridge-Smith of the Battle Cruiser Renown was convicted today by court-martial on a charge of negligence following collision of the Renown with Revenge.

The charge, "that he caused to be hazarded" the two giant war vessels during manoeuvres off the Spanish Coast in January, was similar to that on which Rear-Admiral Sidney Bailey, commander of the Battle Cruiser Repulse, was acquitted yesterday. A third court-martial is yet to be held, the trial of Admiral C. W. Toovey of the Hood on which the Rear-Admiral's flag flies.

The court ruled he be dismissed from his ship. Prosecuting Judge Advocate announced the charge had been proved.

The verdict said "The said hazarding was due to the accused having continued on the course ordered at a speed of 12 knots until the risk of collision was present and subsequently he failed to take effective action to prevent a collision."

In a statement read to the Court the naval officer said although he believed the Hood had ample room to carry out the manoeuvres the squadron was executing, he took the precaution of turning away and ordering the Renown's engines stopped.

Officer's Statement

One half minute later, the statement continued: "when the Hood still appeared to maintain her course and speed and no signal was forthcoming, or sign of any avoiding or hanging action, he ordered the engines reversed and warning blast sounded on the Renown's siren.

Captain Sawbridge-Smith in his opinion the Hood could have avoided the collision as late as the time he ordered the engines reversed, but apparently she didn't see the Renown.

The Renown, her commander's statement said, had stopped and was just getting under sternward way when the collision occurred.

Yesterday, the Rear Admiral had indicated his belief the collision could not have happened had the Renown executed the manoeuvres more smartly.

LIBERALS CHARGED WITH OBSTRUCTING BENNETT REFORM

Opposition Blames Government For Unemployment

RELIEF IN QUEBEC

Woodsworth Claims No Recovery Under Capital System

Ottawa, Feb. 27—(CP)—Charges of obstructing government reform policies were hurled at Liberal members of the House of Commons yesterday as the House spent the whole day debating a want-of-confidence motion directed at the government's alleged failure to deal with the unemployment problem. All parties agreed the lot of the unemployed was hard and their numbers enormous, but while Conservatives contended improvement has taken all possible steps and was planning more to deal with the situation, Liberals held exactly the opposite and blamed government tariff and other political policies.

From seats at the south-east corner occupied by Farmer and Labor members allied with the C.C.F. came a denunciation of both parties but more frequent in the initial motion which was launched Monday by Hon. Ian Mackenzie, Vancouver Centre), J. S. Woodsworth, C. C. F. leader, warned the people would not put up with present conditions forever. If steps were not taken to correct them there would be trouble.

"Blockade" Says Turnbull

It was F. W. Turnbull (Con. Regina) who charged Liberals with a "blockade" of Conservative legislative. R. M. Shit of Nelson, said Liberals had been doing all the talking during the past four years while the Conservatives were about to be offered not a single helpful suggestion. He sounded a warning, however, that members were about to do a bit of talking. During the next few months, he said, they would go on the hustings and show the people exactly what the government had done, what it proposed to do and how little help it had received from Liberals.

Montrealer Member's Attack

Unemployment conditions of Montreal were portrayed in dark hues by Hon. Fernand Rinfret, Liberal member for St. James and former Mayor of that city. He objected to the unemployment rejection of Premier L. A. Taschereau's plea to Ottawa to join with the federal government in relieving municipalities

Canadian Railway Problem One Aspect of Depression Problem

Prof. McDougall, Queen's, Prefers Co-operation to Amalgamation

Mr. J. L. McDougall of the Department of Commerce, Queen's University who spoke last night at the Y.M.C.A. on The Canadian Railway Problem said that the railway problem could not be fruitfully discussed by itself. It was essentially one very important aspect of the present problem of the current depression. That while there was certain things that would be done inside the railway field they were most of them of a nature that would make section on them much easier after prosperity had returned than it was at the present time. Railways were businesses a large part of whose costs were fixed and therefore, even a small decline in gross earnings carried through to a greatly magnified degree on the net earnings. The decline in gross earnings between 1928 and 1930 was 9 1-3 times as great as any of the two-year cyclical declines in gross earnings, and 2 1-2 times as great as the decline in the period 1913-21. It is therefore perfectly clear that we face one index of the exceptionally serious depression of our economic society, but it is not fruitful to think that a solution is to be procured within the framework of the railways themselves and without reference to the rest of our economic arrangements.

Complete Unification Necessary

Accepting that, this primary thesis that it is a depression, the general problem of which will permit of something like a real easing of the present difficulties, Mr. McDougall went on to discuss the conditions which would make a solution of prosperity possible. He said that the foundation of Canadian prosperity lay in the prosperity of the export trades—those basic industries, wheat, certain dairy products, grain, wood, wood products and pulp, paper, and fishing were the foundation of the whole Canadian economy. They employ nearly half of the total labour force and the demands provided the only available market for the manufacturing and trading classes. They had also been hit with a peculiar severity by the fall in prices after 1929. The trouble lay not in the fact that the prices at which they sold had fallen so much, although that in itself was serious enough because of the debt problem, but that the prices at which they sold had fallen so much further than the prices of things they bought. He then referred to an article by Professor Innis, in which he entitled "Economic Movements in Canada, 1921-31 and their Implications" presidential address of the Canadian Political Science Association, 1934 VI., 1934) in which it was demonstrated that through the decade 1921-31 there had been a steady drain from the rural areas of $50,000 people or 71 per cent of the natural increase. Based on the 1931 census of past years, it was proper to expect a corresponding drain during the decade of 800,000 people in the decade 1931-41 even if agriculture was just as prosperous as it was in the decade 1921-31. It therefore suggested that the decision which lay before the urban and protected classes of this country was not whether they could continue indefinitely to retain for themselves the present higher real income which they now enjoyed by comparison with the farming classes, but whether they chose to ease the strain on those classes by a reduction in urban wages and prices or would prefer to wait until such prices were forced down by the operation of factors coming in from the rural areas. If the latter course were chosen, it would of course merely prolong the period of adjustment in which unemployment would be excessive, reflect costs high, and government deficits highly probable—a dangerous period in politics.

Co-operation Not Amalgamation

Co-operation was those adjustments which were possible inside the railway field. Mr. McDougall described amalgamation as being a solution which if it had been advanced by a railway company would be condemned unhesitatingly as a deplorably selfish measure. It was also open to the hazards of sectional pressures for lower rates, to even greater political interference than now existed, and to possibly greater pressure from well-organized groups of employees. He also stated that the economies which were possible by amalgamation had not been recomputed since the 1928-30 period and had probably doubled which or they would now exceed 20 to 30 millions on the basis of present traffic. Of co-operation, he said that while it possessed many drawbacks and put an enormous strain upon the railway agreements by demanding a loyal co-operation, in particular services, nevertheless it appeared to him as being a very much more desirable course than old amalgamation.

Mr. Chas. A. Cameron occupied the chair at the meeting which was the sixth of a series of Current Citizenship meetings under the auspices of the Faculty of Commerce. After a number of questions were answered by the speaker a vote of thanks was tendered on motion of Mr. Kenneth Bill.

A POSTAGE STAMP ROMANCE

BY

George Moffat James, B.A., LL.B.

(All Rights Reserved)

How often we hear the remark that everyone should have a hobby of some kind, something of interest to occupy leisure time and to cause a forgetfulness of more serious daily pursuits! One of the best known and most frequently practised hobbies is that of collecting postage stamps; it is popular in every land and clime, and has keen enthusiasts among old and young, rich and poor, male and female. The King of England has the finest and most valuable collection in the world, running into millions of dollars.

A CANADIAN COLLECTION

A half century ago the writer (George M. James, Belleville, Ontario, Canada), became deeply interested in the study and collection of Canadian postage stamps both used and unused and day by day, year by year he built up one of the choicest, best and most valuable collections of "Canadians" known to exist in the world. The collection was used to entertain friends and for instruction purposes in history and geography. The "Stamp Man" was always sure of an interested audience wherever he went, and the boys and girls often reached home late from school.

"Where did you get all these rare old stamps; we never saw anything like them before?"

Then came the war, and time often asked, and was usually answered somewhat in the following fashion.

HOW STAMPS ARE OBTAINED

"Many times during the past quarter of a century, I have asked my relatives and friends everywhere to search among their old papers and letters and to send to me any stamps of any kind that they might discover. I was always careful to warn them not to attempt to tear or cut off the stamps in any way for fear they might be damaged and this precaution more than anything else contributed to the excellence and perfection of my valuable collection. The papers or letters were sent to me and I removed the stamps without damage or discoloration. Many valuable stamps have been ruined through carelessness and ignorance. The uninitiated seem to assume that cutting or tearing a stamp is of no consequence.

As a result of my persistent solicitations, I received stamps from time to time that gradually built up a well nigh perfect collection of Canadian stamps (single stamps, pairs and blocks) from the earliest date 1851. Not only that but I received more than one of a kind very often which enabled me to pick out very fine copies for mounting in my album. All other duplicates were traded or sold for such missing stamps as were required. Then in a most unexpected manner something happened that was discussed around the world by less fortunate stamp hunters.

A GRANDFATHER BECOMES INTERESTED

My maternal grandfather had retired on pension from life-long duties in the Civil Service at Oxford, England. His wife was dead and his large family of sons and daughters were progressing favorably in Ontario. Lonely and old, but still vigorous and intellectual, he decided to visit his children and finally he laid to rest near their homes. The writer can never forget his first interview with that rugged, keen witted, jovial, kind old man, a typical English gentleman if there ever was one.

Our home was the first he visited as it was the most convenient, after disembarkation, being only a few miles west of Toronto. His first question, being only a few miles west of Toronto. His first question was George and he called me George as an Englishman pronounces that simple, old-fashioned name. Naturally his namesake became his favorite grandchild, and ever since I have been very lucky because of my grandfather's little fear that I would be left out as a stamp collector. But believe it or not, nothing had really happened yet.

"Let me see," said grandfather in a whisper to himself with eyes half shut directed upward at the ceiling. "Did I place those old papers and letters in that box of clothes and trinkets? By Jove, George, I did," he shouted after a short pause at the same time striking the table with his disengaged hand with such force that some dishes on the sideboard fell down.

GRANDFATHER'S CONTRIBUTION

For a few days I was in great suspense and excitement but at last "that box of clothes and trinkets" came to hand by freight. The old letters and papers proved to be a gold mine as one of the first stamps to meet my gaze, when grandfather placed the neatly tied bundle in my hands, was the world famous Canadian 12 penny black, one of the rarest stamps in existence. This stamp was one of the first issued in Canada in 1851 and was used on letters to the British Isles. My stamp was in perfect condition and only very lightly cancelled by the several concentric circles then used for that purpose. To-day my stamp is valued at about fifteen hundred dollars because only about a score of them are known to exist anywhere throughout the world.

Grandfather never tired of selecting, arranging and mounting my stamps with me little realizing what was to happen next.

THE VICISSITUDES OF BUSINESS

Within a few short years dear old grandfather was dead, and I was in business in the great, growing city of Winnipeg. I needed more capital quickly with the alternative of failure and heavy loss. What was I to do? At last it occurred to me that I might sell my stamps and thus win out. An advertisement was inserted in "The Free Press" as follows:

FOR SALE

An almost complete collection of Canadian Postage Stamps containing the rare 12d black. Phone 7192 for appointment.

Within a fortnight the collection, which for years had meant so much to me, was gone but my bank account was several thousand dollars better off and business not only went on but prospered. This happened about twenty-five years ago.

Recently the writer received a startling letter from the wealthy Winnipeg financier, who paid a large sum of money to promote his hobby with as little consideration as you would buy a dish of ice cream.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST

Dear Mr. James:

The depression has made me a poor man. I found it necessary to leave Winnipeg and all I once so complacently possessed. It was a terrible blow but I am here in the heart of the fruit district of British Columbia on a small fruit farm where perhaps I can subsist for the time that still remains. I am building a modest home for which I require more capital than I possess; it is impossible to borrow here.

I still have your famous 12d black stamp and would like to sell it back to you because of the history that surrounds it (you once told me about your wonderful grandfather) and also because a few hundred dollars would now mean as much to me. Name your own price and ask me to forward the stamp to your address.

With best wishes and kindest regards, I remain,

That letter thrilled me from tip to toe. What a multitude of happy memories it recalled! Certainly I bought back that stamp, the greatest treasure in the world to me now and I encouraged the mighty who had fallen as he sore had helped me. There is a glorious fraternity, and hallowed sentiment about collecting postage stamps. Try it for yourself.

AMBITION'S LADDER

How can young people get a start in life in these critical days? In much the same way. There are still old papers and letters. It is now many years since a twelve penny black has been found, not since 10 cents as far as is known. These stamps rarely turn up on this side of the Atlantic as their destination was the other way. But there are still many others to be located.

The writer would advise parents to start a boy in stamps about the age of ten years. Let him have a few used stamps of each kind issued during that time, he will be able to sell or trade them for others and so on, always worth what they cost. It is impossible to say for this plan.

Nevertheless most people collect used stamps because they are cheaper and also because they get so many (as I did) for nothing. The writer will always be pleased to advise interested parties and remember that this story contains valuable suggestions for boys and girls. They can attain their ideals if they have faith in themselves.

A SPLENDID PAL

These reminiscences would be incomplete without a brief reference to my splendid pal, Mr. George A. Lowe, Toronto, Ontario, the head of Lowe-Martin Company, stationers. We say time without number for the past half century has assisted the writer in building up present and past collections. Mr. Lowe always has exactly what is required, and his genial personality adds immeasurably to the efficient service. His many friends wish him many more years of happiness and prosperity.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM

In 1932 the writer spent many hours in the British Museum, London, England, examining a large collection of postage stamps donated to that institution by a wealthy Englishman. The stamps were arranged according to countries in medium size picture frames under glass and were hinged to a central pivot pillar. The observer could stand at one point and by turning the frames around view the entire collection. The writer was delighted to discover that his own present collection far surpassed those on exhibition representing Canada both in perfection and completeness.

The following notes made at that time and place may be interesting and useful.

The first stamps issued in Canada in 1851 consisted of three denominations, 3 pence red, 6 pence violet and 12 pence black (but the Museum collection has no 12 pence black, in truth very few collectors have ever even seen this stamp). These stamps at this time without number for the past half century has assisted the writer in building up present and past collections. Mr. Lowe always has exactly what is required, and his genial personality adds immeasurably to the efficient service. His many friends wish him many more years of happiness and prosperity.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM

In 1932 the writer spent many hours in the British Museum, London, England, examining a large collection of postage stamps donated to that institution by a wealthy Englishman. The stamps were arranged according to countries in medium size picture frames under glass and were hinged to a central pivot pillar. The observer could stand at one point and by turning the frames around view the entire collection. The writer was delighted to discover that his own present collection far surpassed those on exhibition representing Canada both in perfection and completeness.

The following notes made at that time and place may be interesting and useful.

The first stamps issued in Canada in 1851 consisted of three denominations, 3 pence red, 6 pence violet and 12 pence black (but the Museum collection has no 12 pence black, in truth very few collectors have ever even seen this stamp). These stamps were all the same size and were issued without perforations as at present. They could not be torn apart but were separated by the use of scissors.

These stamps are rare for several reasons:

1. In 1851 the population of Canada was small.

2. Most of that population were engaged in agriculture and hence not much inclined to letter writing.

3. Letters could either be prepaid or be left to be paid by the receiver at the British Isles.

4. The 3 penny stamp was used for destinations within Canada, the 6 penny for the United States and the 12 penny for the British Isles.

These first three stamps were printed on "Laid Paper".

Then in 1852 the same three stamps were printed on wove paper but still without perforations. The colour of the 3 penny was changed to brown, and has been found in four varieties: very thin wove, thin wove, ordinary wove and thick wove.

On December 5, 1854, a new unimperforated stamp appeared, the 10 penny blue, which bore the portrait of Queen Victoria. This was beautifully done, was engraved and printed as in the case of the others by the firm of Rawdon, Wright, Hatch and Edson of New York City. This stamp has been found on both thin wove and thick wove paper, with the higher present valuation on the latter. All the above papers are without watermarks.

In 1857 the ½ pence rose and 7½ pence pale green appeared to meet the needs of an expanding colony.

Then in 1859 the currency of Canada changed to dollars and cents, a new issue of stamps was imperative. On July 1st, 1859, the following denominations appeared in perforated sheets: 1 cent pink, 5 cent vermilion (beaver), 10 cent red lilac (Prince Albert), later changed to 10 cent black, 12½ cent yellow green, and 17 cent blue. On August 1st, 1864, a 2 cent pink appeared. All the above stamps were engraved and printed by the American Bank Note Co. of New York City upon unwatermarked, wove paper with perforations gauge 12. Several of the above stamps bore the portrait of the youthful Queen Victoria. All these early stamps are still regarded as masterpieces of beauty and design.

The various shades of the 1 cent, 2 cent and 5 cent stamps are found on ordinary wove, thick wove and thin wove paper. The 10 cent stamp has shades from black to purple.

In 1867 the Dominion of Canada was formed and again a new set of stamps was found to be necessary. During February 1869 the following denominations appeared: ½c black, 1c brown red, 2c pale green, 3c red, 6c brown, 12½c blue and 15c lilac. These stamps were larger than any that had been issued and larger than those now in use. Each bore the head of the young queen. This is a beautiful and famous set among collectors because it is financially within the reach of all.

On October 1st, 1875, a large 5c olive green stamp appeared similar to the above set, engraved and printed like the rest by the British American Bank Note Co. of Montreal and Ottawa.

During March, 1876 a smaller 5c green stamp appeared of similar design.

During July, 1882 a smaller 3c black was issued but of similar design to that of 1869. These were supplied by the British American Bank Note Co. already mentioned.

The above notes are just as they may be found in British Museum.

Since 1882 many issues have appeared in Canada for many reasons, historical, geographical and economical. No other study can compare with philately for interest, profit and wisdom.

The present collection owned by Mr. James contains all the Canadian stamps mentioned above and those of later issues, many of which are unused and also in pairs and blocks of four. A hobby will keep you young and happy.

PROFESSOR WATTS HEARD BY GROUPS IN JOHN ST. CHURCH

Joint Meeting is Held of Young Women's Guild and Current Events Club

The joint meeting of the John Street Church Young Women's Guild and the Current Events Club of the same church, held on Monday evening was a decided success. The occasion was the official opening of the club room which has been furnished and decorated in keeping with the efforts of the two societies. Seen under the soft glow of lamp shades, it presented a most palatable and homelike aspect. The members and their friends were welcomed by Mrs. James McIntosh and Douglas Bews, as Presidents, and enjoyed an interesting social hour in the room's cheerful atmosphere. Mr. Bews in opening the meeting expressed the gratitude of the Current Events Club for the work of the decorating committee of the Guild and the hope that they might co-operate on other occasions.

Following a brief devotional period led by Rev. Robert Allin and a solo, "God's Garden" by Mrs. Chambers, J. G. Watts, President of Physics at Queen's University, was introduced as speaker of the evening.

Professor Watts is a man with broad experience and with interests, embracing not only the science on which he is a recognized authority but also the economic and social problems of the day which he studies in a practical way. He also impressed his hearers with a sense of his mature philosophy of life grounded in Christian ethics, and his ability to relate every problem to that philosophy.

He spoke on the subject, "Are the Problems of Youth Today Any More Acute Than in Any Other Generation?" He enumerated the battles which had been fought and won for the present generation—the battle against plagues, against physical forces; against disease and plagues, against famine; against slavery. He also outlined various phases of life which still presented problems to modern youth, but stated that we were passing through this period of industrial adjustment more cheerfully than those of the past, without the degree of suffering which accompanied the Industrial Revolution.

The fundamental change which Professor Watts found in modern life was a shifting of values, placing above all others the worth of human personality and re-orienting our lives accordingly. This would involve individual adjustment, but was taught from those more fortunately placed and would be a severe test of one's desire for reform. He made a strong appeal for the adventurous application of the Sermon on the Mount and warned against the danger of discussion which did not lead to action.

In the discussion which followed Professor Watts corroborated such points as the definition of private property and its value in developing personality, profit versus service as a motive; the duty of the church in the present crisis; the prospects for the future of the unemployment situation; the competitive difficulties accompanying the abolition of child labour and the scarcity of the middle ages. Mr. Hedley Thomas expressed the gratitude of the audience to Professor Watts for his thought-provoking address.

The social hour which followed was brightened by two solos from Captain J. Buchanan, and the enthusiastic singing of old-time airs, led by Mr. R. Hackborn. Delicious refreshments were served from an attractive tea table by the social committee of the Current Events Club and her assistants. Everyone voted that the gathering of the evening warranted its establishment as a regular function.

TRENTON WOMAN FRACTURES LEG

Mrs. Sheedy Brought to General Hospital at Belleville

Trenton, Feb. 26.— (Special) — The slippery roads of Trenton Monday have caused many minor accidents and falls. Mrs. Sheedy, who resides on Dundas Street, fell Monday morning on Dundas Street in front of Dr. Johnson's office. She was attended to with the assistance of Mrs. Reid, Lake Street, and later removed to the Belleville General Hospital. Dundas street is very slippery after the sleet and many spills have occurred with no heavy damage. Tuesday afternoon a fine team owned by Jas. Tallo fell on road and had to scramble to get to its feet. At the time they were shocked. They did night damage to the sleigh but miraculously escaped injury to themselves.

Newly Formed Rhythm Club Entertains

Last night the pick of the younger set of Trenton attended a dance in the I.O.O.F. hall on Front street, at the first dance of the newly formed Rhythm Club. The music was furnished by an orchestra under Jean Rhythm Band of Trenton. The hall was nicely decorated for the occasion and much praise is due the members, Elmer Bonter, Hugh Blair, Jas. Reid and Fred Cooke, Jr., for their time in preparing the program for the evening. Elmer Bonter led the grand march in company with Hugh Blair ably assisting.

The door prize was won by Vic Wills with ticket No. 43. S. Thompson, one of the novelty dance prizes. The night was such a success that it will be repeated one week from last night to get in habit Lent.

CORNWALL STANDARD-FREEHOLDER

The Standard-Freeholder of Cornwall this month observed more than a century of newspaper progress in that town, by issuing a special edition. The front page is characteristic for the occasion as it presents a view of the newspaper office as well reduced reproductions of first issues of papers in 1834, 1846, 1865, 1870, 1876, 1888, 1886, and 1932. There is also the list of Cornwall newspapers which date back to the Observer, founded in 1831, the Freeholder founded in 1846, the Constitutional, 1847, the Economist, 1860, The Advertiser, 1865, Gazette, 1870, Reporter, 1876, News, 1883, Standard 1886 and the Standard-Freeholder, 1932. The edition marks the opening of the new building and plant of the newspaper.

The progress edition is a thirty-two page issue, the first section of sixteen pages being special in character. In well written and attractive stories the story of the modern miracle, printing, is told while the story of advertising and news-gathering is related and illustrated with reproductions of photographs of buildings. The special news section is worthy of attention. There is a very interesting history of the foundation of the first first newspaper from which beginning the story is told of the progress of the development.

In the regular section of the paper, the Standard-Freeholder covers a wide amount of news, especially of interest to the people of Cornwall and district.

The Standard-Freeholder is to be complimented on the excellent progress edition which gives an intimate story of the newspaper in its relation to the community which it serves so efficiently.

WHAT NEW YORK PREACHERS SAY

Fear of life's problems, which overwhelms some persons, can be overcome by faith in Christ, Rev. Dr. Rankin Barnes told a congregation in The Resurrection in New York on Sunday. "Our Lord can be for us the remedy of a sense of inferiority. The term 'inferiority complex' is very much in today but it goes back to the story of Cain and Abel, because Cain felt himself inferior to Abel. Some think they can overcome this feeling of inferiority by strutting about, others by courting flattery, and still others by avoiding the truth. These remedies, however, work for ten minutes and then dash out of the window. Religion is the only sure and permanent cure for inferiority."

Too often men give God the loose change, which is all they have left after buying luxuries, said Rev. Dr. LaFlamme, New York.

The secret of a consciously useful life is to cooperate with others in order to make something infinitely better become real, was the opinion expressed by the Rev. Eugene Blake, of the Collegiate Reformed Church of St. Nicholas. "If men are to escape the feeling of futility so prevalent nowadays, they must remember that they are only two cells in the body organism. Christians are not single individuals going their separate ways in an attempt to save the world, but they have for us to accept ourselves as we are, with our own possibilities and our own limitations.

Socialism and communism are inadequate to man's spiritual needs in this era of great changes in man's social, economic and political life, Rev. Dr. Charles Erdman, professor of Princeton Theological Seminary, said. "The period has seen great changes but the moral and spiritual needs of man remain unchanged." Urging a long distance view of one hundred years be taken in judging the work of missionaries, he continued: "One hundred years ago there were more Buddhists, Hindus, Mohammedans in the world. Today there are more Christians. Christianity now has more adherents than any other religion and the Bible is the most widely distributed book in the world. And no name is more widely known and reverenced than the name of Christ."

"The world has grown proud of its advances in the idea of service, in humanitarian endeavor, in social theory, in governmental responsibility, for human welfare, commented Rev. Dr. F. H. Knubel at Columbia Chapel. We have not learned however that 'love is the greatest thing in the world.' We are far from a discernment that to be unselfish is the essence of life. To be selfish is literally to be dead. The fact that the profit motive cannot be eliminated from the world's trade is the proof that in spite of our humanitarian advances we have not actually understood unselfishly. It has remained for the church alone to preach love freely. It is the only absolutely unselfish thing on earth.

Prayer was likened to rain by Rev. Dr. R. H. Glover. Incense is a figure for prayer and just means the incense was composed of little particles so should prayer be made up of innumerable little things. It is the little things that rob us of peace of heart and mind more than anything else. Just as incense smoke rose to be stored in golden vials—so were the supplications—to be answered when they did most good. He likened this to the sun's drawing moisture into the sky to form clouds which the winds carry to soak parched land, where their rain restores to the land its former fertility.

POET ON THE JOB

"One man in England who must be working particularly hard for the Jubilee is John Masefield", says The New York Times. "He is the Poet Laureate and he probably has a few ideas in his head already for the Jubilee ode. We may take it that it will be a very ode. In the first place, Mr. Masefield is a fine poet. In the second place, there will probably be an unofficial competitor in the field in the person of the unofficial gentleman who in 1897 wrote 'Recessional' for Queen Victoria's second Jubilee.

"Kipling wrote that poem for The London Times, which did not regretfully send it back as an unsolicited manuscript that did not quite fall in with the editorial plans, though not devoid, &c. Only last November he wrote of 'Recessional' wrote a vey good poem for the dedication of the Great War Mausoleum at Melbourne, Australia. George V. and Rudyard Kipling will both be 70 this year, the King being the senior by seven months."

TOMATOES

In this age of plenty it is not surprising to read that, among other accumulations, there is a large surplus of tomatoes, presenting a serious problem for those interested in marketing this year's crop. At the beginning of September last year, according to some estimates, there were approximately three million cases on hand, taking the country as a whole. The average consumption of tomatoes is about 150,000 cases a month, or 1,800,000 cases a year. Under these conditions, there will be 1,200,000 cases left over on September 1 and this will mean that only an additional 600,000 cases will be needed from this year's crop to complete the requirements for the following twelve months, representing only about a one-third the crop. In other words, the pack is piling up in such a way that growers are facing the danger of a big crop unless something is done to correct the situation.

Just what can be done? Obviously, one excellent way out of the difficulty is to induce people to eat more tomatoes. It is felt that, with a properly organized selling campaign, it should be quite possible to dispose of the whole surplus. There is less than five dollars, indicating that contributors are people of small means. Contributions have been received from all parts of the United States, and even from Canada. It is claimed that new alibi evidence has been discovered in Hauptman's behalf. His lawyer's claim that the work of assembling the new evidence will be in excess of $25,000.

There is nothing more wholesome than tomatoes; they are extremely popular with the public and possess properties which make them one of the most valuable of food products. Very rich in vitamins and recommended by dietists for their unique qualities, and at the same time selling at a price which brings them within easy reach of all classes of consumers, these delectable fruits—or, if you prefer, vegetables—should find a ready sale, whatever difficulty is faced.

Less than half a case a year extra for every family, it is calculated, would clear up the surplus. Half a case represents only seven tins. It should not be too difficult a matter to persuade the public to increase their purchases to that extent. There is another way by which the pack might be moved speedily, through the co-operation of hotels, service clubs, women's organizations, etc. Tomatoes make a tasty and appreciated side-dish. But these are only a few relished several up, as they too often are, on the plate with meat and other vegetables. At public dinners, small and large, and for private meals at home, the increased consumption of Canadian tomatoes—than which there are none finer—would serve the double purpose of contributing to the enjoyment and health of the eater and the properity of growers and all engaged in the sale of the product.—Hamilton Spectator.

GREAT FORTUNES

The subject of large fortunes is an interesting study. It reveals that some individuals, in various parts of the world, have accumulated enormous wealth. In England, the big fortunes are possessed by the Duke of Westminster and the estate of the late John Ellerman, shipping magnate. These are estimated at about one hundred millions each. Arthur Drach, owner of vast land and timber areas in Jugoslavia is reputed to be worth two hundred million dollars.

But the wealthiest man in the world is said to be Nizam of Hyderabad, in India, who has wealth estimated at two billion dollars. He is said to have a private treasure house holding five hundred million dollars' worth of gold bars.

In the United States, Rockefeller may be regarded as at the top of the list of millionaires, though it is believed that John D. Rockefeller, Sr., and Henry Ford are about in the same class. At least it may be asumed that none of these boys need feel immediate concern about the next meal if the price to purchase it should be the only consideration.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

It is generally admitted and very frequently proved that virtue and genius and all the natural good qualities which men possess, are derived from their mothers. —Hook.

DAVID COPPERFIELD

From out the well-loved book they stepped
And once again I laughed and wept
For David's joys and woes.
With Agnes, Dora, Peggotty,
And daring, modest Emily
I saw old leaves unclose.

O, little David Copperfield,
There is no mother but would shield
And hold you in her arms;
Would brush each shadow from your face.
And joy in all your childish grace,
In all your artless charms!

How much of magic moved the pen
Which wrought this mimic world of men,
Micawber, Steerforth, Heep!
How much of triumph in the art
Of actors who lay bare the heart,
Its passions strong and deep!

BRUNO RICHARD HAUPTMANN, sentenced to be electrocuted in New Jersey during March for the murder of the Lindbergh baby, will not die on the date scheduled, appeals having been entered which will not be heard until some time later. That opinion in this guilt is not unanimous is shown by the fact that the defence fund has grown to $10,000 with an objective of $25,000. The money is being held in the Flemington, N. J., where the trial took place, and will be used in an effort to obtain a new trial and his defence generally. Most of the donations are less than five dollars, indicating that contributors are people of small means. Contributions have been received from all parts of the United States, and even from Canada. It is claimed that new alibi evidence has been discovered in Hauptman's behalf. His lawyer's claim that the work of assembling the new evidence will be in excess of $25,000.

JUSTICE IS OFTEN TEMPERED WITH MERCY—Frinstance. 21-year-old girl was arrested for peddling pins and needles in the New York subway. She is almost blind and is the only support of a three-year-old sister. She pleaded for an immediate hearing so as to get back as soon as possible to her sister. It was late in the day and the next day was a holiday, so she was faced with a night in a cell and the next day in court and whatever that held for her. A sympathetic police officer sergeant Applegate—took Magistrate having jurisdiction in that district, who ordered her release and set the hearing for the morning of the holiday. At the Magistrate's suggestion the charge was withdrawn and the girl has obtained a position which she hopes to hold despite her failing sight. Unfortunately she has let it be known that she was ever in need of assistance, financial or otherwise, she was not to hesitate to call upon him.

IT WAS ONLY SIXTY YEARS AGO when the North West Mounted Police began to police the vast Canadian plains—and from all that has occurred since that time it would seem that more than a century must have elapsed since the days when the scarlet-coated mounties first shed the mantle of a beneficient protection around Indian tepee and settler cabin, driving whisky peddlers out and chasing all kinds of crooks and bad men out of the country, even holding harmless that scourge of the Western United States, Sitting Bull and his fierce and ruthless warriors, who invaded Canada when they lost faith in their Great White Father of Washington after one of his favorite sons, General Custer, was tomahawked by an Indian in a battle of Custer's own choosing. The influence for good of the Royal North West Mounted Police will always be a glorious chapter of Canadian history, a body of men not too well paid for risking life and limb daily, nor too well fed on victuals but who considered the honor of the force above everything, the one thing that mattered.

Meeting a child sobbing "I've lost a penny," a benevolent old gentleman produced another to stem the flow of grief. "Oh, you wicked old man, so you had it all the time!" was all the thanks he got.

ATTRACTIVE PERSONALITY OFTEN HIDDEN

Passive Personality Sometimes Conceals True Character

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D., Finance Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright, 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

The most important of the character traits—personality—is also the most difficult to analyze. Just what is personality?

In the first place, personality is not necessarily an attractive quality, for we often speak of a person possessing a disagreeable personality.

Nor is personality a correct index of character. A thief may give the impression of being all the virtues and all the charming attributes of a gentleman, while yet, side by side with these winning ways, are anti-social and immoral traits.

Confidence men and other swindlers use an attractive personality as their stock in trade. By means of personality, they capitivate the unwary.

Usually, of course, the term "personality" is used to indicate the best human attributes rather than the worst ones. In fact, unless an individual is clever at deception, his true personality is the sum of his behavior, and his real personality is soon labeled for what it actually is.

It is through speech, manners and actions that personality reveals itself. What we say and how we say it; the way we conduct ourselves, our appearance, bearing, deportment and address; what we do and how we do it—these are the data on which judgment of personality is based.

Some persons, however, have an attractive personality, but somehow hide it and do not allow it to be recognized. They are quiet shy and retiring. They, do not talk much. One must know them a long while before being able to penetrate their defense of reserve and so discover the charm that lies underneath. Such persons may be said to possess a "passive personality."

But what counts in personality is that thing in the character make-up that somehow emanates from the human being and manages to get across to the other fellow.

That something one cannot define. It is a radiating force that acts like radium rays from pitchblend. It is powerful. It affects the person with whom it comes in contact. And those affected are always influenced unwittingly. That is the personality forces make the others want to become better acquainted, even to be influenced by them.

One often hears it said that some woman is "so beautiful, but she has personality." In other words, beauty alone is not enough. The lack of mere prettiness becomes of secondary importance to the greatest asset in all personality.

Personality cannot be manufactured at the moment. It comes gradually and steadily, with increasing strength, as habits of thought, action, and of social value and charm develop.

It takes years to acquire the very highest type of personality, and there is always room for further improvement.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

Persons who are overweight may well adopt a vegetable or "fruit" meal once a week. Only green vegetables should be eaten on such days, and no bulger, milk or other highly nourishing food. If hungry eat a very small cup of beef bouillon is allowable during the afternoon or at bedtime.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Full of Go

If you don't get enough bile each day to digest the food you eat, it just decays in your stomach. It poisons you with gas, acids and constipation. You feel sour, sunk and ruined. You need bile to digest fats. That's all. Without bile, your food doesn't digest and it decays in your stomach. It's time to get some bile into your bowels. Then you'll feel like getting out of bed in the morning. You'll be full of ginger and pep.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food does not digest. It decays. Then gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your head aches. Your skin breaks out. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and ruined.

It takes those good old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get this bile flowing freely. Then you get the right kind of a movement and not a pill movement. They contain vegetable ingredients that are gentle but sure. Be sure to get CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS when it comes to making the bile flow freely. Don't accept substitutes. Insist on the genuine Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's in the red package. Only 25c at all druggists. Directions in each package. 25MIE.C.

Dr. Young, 21 Years Missionary in Japan Addresses Congregation

Stirling, Feb. 27—Dr. Young who has recently returned from Japan, addressed a large congregation on Sunday morning in Stirling Presbyterian Church, Stirling.

With twenty-one years experience in Japan, Dr. Young speaks with authority. "The English speaking nations of the world are the self styled Christian nations," he stated. "But there is no Christian nations in the true sense of the word. The term is applied too broadly. We may find that hard to take, but it is a fact nevertheless. Any truly Christian nation is one efficiency, free from paganism, idolatry and sin. No such nation exist. Our trouble is a superiority complex that is dangerous. We look down upon nations less blessed than ourselves, and fail to see our own shortcomings, with paganism at about us, we dare call ourselves a Christian nation. Christianity is a religion that portrays a greater need in the other countries, and practices contrary to the Christian principles are more apparent there.

God's church people were locked upon with favor by Him until they assumed possession of Him and looked upon other people (even as the samaritans as outcasts; and by losing the spirit of gospel beyond their own boundaries, were scattered to the ends of the earth. Their inevitable re-union will not come about when they realize that they have no more need of Him.

Christianity must expand or die. All living churches are active in the missionary branch of the work. God's people failed to carry out the command of Christ to go into the world and preach the Gospel. Instead, they assembled in churches and classed others beneath themselves. (God) is a command, and (Christ) is the plan by these people today. Just as Paul heard the plea: 'Come over into Macedonia and help us,' and started the gospel in the westward of the world of that day. We must answer the plea to take it eastward. The plea is the same, and the vision need, and God commands us to go. This is the fire that keeps the Christian cause aflame.

In Korea we may see twenty-one hundred the chief Koreans in worship in Christianized centres. To mankind these with filthy, unkempt, starving thousands in the market place we at once see the need. The sure must be satisfied by the command obeyed, and then the reward will be shared, even as we go among the Hindus. Are any who claim Christianity and fail to respond to the ministry urge; I am afraid he is following afar off. Some say we must build ourselves first. "You cannot build a Christian Church on anything but Christianity. That will be not only for us, but for all the world. We must do the command, and our building of the home church will automatically come about as God's reward to our faithfulness."

After the regular service in St. Paul's United Church on Sunday evening, nearly one hundred members and adherents assembled in the fire-side hour held in the church parlors. A very friendly and happy atmosphere was created as several members called upon by Rev. E. W. Connell to give responses of their experiences in the communion service.

Mr. George Lucey and Mr. Chas. Thompson related many interesting events that had occurred during their long period of residence in and around Stirling. Others were called upon to relate the height of their residence here. Then followed a short song service of familiar hymns. A very fine feature of the meeting was a double quartette by eight young men of the congregation. Those taking part were:—B. Hedley, T. Hilderchand, J. Potter, J. Munroe, R. Clarke, C. Potter, R. Matheson and Robert Fraser. Under the direction of Mr. Patterson, this group of young men rendered fine talent.

Mr. R. G. Lawlor led in the discussion of the evening, which dealt with the relationship between the church and state. It was a timely topic, and dealt with in a very constructive way from many different angles. The meeting closed with prayer.

The members of the local Boy Scouts provided a very fine feature in connection with the pancake tea served by the adult ladies class of Trenton United Church on Friday, Feb. 22.

Taking along a good representation of the troop, Scout Master Tom Ward and Patrol Leader Arthur Gould arranged a programme that delighted all who gathered there. Several numbers were given by the Scout orchestra, comprised of Gerald Sprental, Ray Williams, and Emile Irene Latchford of Foxboro and Hazel Evelyn Wager at home, in addition to thirteen grand children. Two brothers, Edwin Latta of Corbyville and William Latta of Napanee, and one sister Mrs. Percy Wood of Corbyville survive.

Fashion Flashes

No matter how many fur or fur-trimmed coats you may possess, you will want a plain one, especially if long-a travelling a great deal. A nice model is done on long, slim lines, with perfect simplicity. A scarf collar of the pelt-through type crosses at the left shoulder, Scarf and cuffs are of a golden brown fine tweed flecked in white.

Into hiding go toes this Winter, as the fashion for sandals is one of the smartest places. A charming sandal is in black moire or crepe, with intricate scroll work of gilt piping. It also comes in white for dining.

Women are asking for fur-trimmed sweater dresses, according to the smartest shops. A lovely model is in brown and gold lame of the heavy type, and the square decolletage both in front and back is outlined with sable-dyed baum marten, so that the fur looks like a huge square.

Never before have we had clothes so dashing and romantic. Instead of the ordinary tailored suit, one wears a wide, deep long cape of black Alaska sealskin. This can be worn, if desired, over a slim-pointed waistcoat of the same fur, or a deep upstanding collar frames the face.

A shining moment will be yours, if you dress one of the new flared dinner suits o' lame. Such a model is in gold lame with a full gold braid frock fastening the coat.

Correct Manners

TIPS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me if, when staying at a hotel for some weeks, it is usual to tip the waiter and chambermaid at regular intervals every week or so, or just when you leave? I mean apart from any special service.

U.

It is usually better for all concerned if you give the fees by the week.

ENGAGEMENT RING

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have been a widow for over five years and I am now twenty-eight years old and am contemplating getting married next month. I would like to know whether it is customary (or proper) to receive an engagement (diamond) ring? Perhaps some other token would be more fitting. If so, what would you suggest

S.

The same type of engagement ring is proper and appropriate for the second engagement as for the first. Usually it is a diamond solitaire mond, as it is for the first engagement. But if the fiancee prefers some other kind of stone...an emerald, a ruby, a sapphire, or her birth stone...this is thoroughly proper too, as it would be for the ring signifying the first engagement.

NEW ARRIVAL

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When our baby arrives, I want to send announcements to our friends. I have been looking at the semi-engraved cards, but most of them have touches of pink or blue, and I do want white cards. The only white card I saw had as much on it, even a little fancy weight," and "remarks".

I, I enclose cards such as I would like. Do you favor them? Should they be fastened together? If so, how and where?

2. If I find that our budget does not allow for the engraving of these would it be correct to have them written?

T.

Thank you so much for your friendly comment, and for your thoroughly delightful letter. It was a joy...a joy too to see a letter written in such excellent form, and with a perfect form of signature.

I so thoroughly agree with you that the white cards are so vastly more attractive for birth announcements than any with touches of pink or blue. And I agree with you too that it is most unfortunate to register anything on these announcements except the name of the baby and the date of its birth. The words "weight" or "place of birth" or "maiden name" are a provincial appearance to the cards.

The type of cards that you sent me have distinct dignity, and I see no reason why I think that if you could get somewhat the same kind with a plain unengraved ribbon of the linen finish they would be even more attractive.

The lines individually and relatively, are excellent too. It is best to have the ribbon measure 1200 to the inch.

Yes, And your writing is so unusually good that I think a plain card will give a most attractive appearance. One suggestion about this: whether you are engraved or written, don't use the "and" sign (&) between Mr. and Mrs... use and. And spell in full the word Street, and any other word that can be spelled out.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"Murder in Clouds"

New Air Thriller With Many Thrills in Fine Entertainment

For genuine thrills, few pictures can equal "Murder in the Clouds", which heads the bill at the Capitol Theatre starting tomorrow.

Spectators at breathless and tense with suspense as daring aviators perform barrel rolls, immelmans, zoom-loopings, wing-overs, fish tails and other death defying stunts. The stunts were not just interpolated into the picture, however, but all form a part of the gripping battles high in the air.

The picture is a melodramatic and exciting mystery thriller in which a band of international spies stop at nothing to steal a chemical formula for a high explosive which is being sent by plane from the West Coast to the U.S. Government.

Thrill follows on thrill in the breath-taking battles of army planes with the fleeing robbers in which planes are shot to the ground and sinners are seen falling out of their flaming ships.

The picture also carries a stirring romance in which two air pilots fight for the love of an heiress and one of them kidnapping her by plane with the other giving chase.

For the first time Lyle Talbot, although constantly playing leads, has been given the principal role that of a daredevil air pilot who eventually is instrumental in smashing the band of conspirators.

Ann Dvorak is charming as the pretty air hostess and Jack Holt, played by a suitor who really belongs to the band of spies, while Gordon Westcott, Robert Light and Henry O'Neill.

AT THE BELLE

"Tweaking All Others"

Trio of Stars Give Grand Performance in Amusing Screen Play

"Tweaking All Others" the most star-studded film to be shown since the advent of Talkies, is the feature attraction at the Belle Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, matinee and evening.

With a Breathtaking Cast

With a cast as large and magnificent as any seen here, the new picture is revolutionary in several respects, in the first place the cast is headed by three outstanding stars, Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Robert Montgomery, who, while they have played in teams, have never appeared all three together. Perfectly cast, they comprise what would be called the ace triangle of the year.

Secondly, the new picture has a verve and pace not the slightest bit weighted or slowed down by the enormity of its cast. This is due to the brilliant direction of W. S. Van-Dyke, who with this picture scored even his smash hit, "The Thin Man", and the excellent individual performances of each player.

As a light comedienne, Joan Crawford reveals a new skill to her many admirers. She is par excellence as Mary, Parkhamville's wild girl, who is the alibi for one gin-nite and is pursued by two of New York's most dashing males the next.

We won't spoil the story by explaining how the lucky and unlucky male in the end; suffice it is to say that Clarke Gable and Robert Montgomery both deserve her by merit of outstanding performances.

Billie Burke Amusing

Billie Burke as the nervous society matron; Charles Butterworth (of the "dead pan") as Mickey's closest friend; Francis Drake as the dark-haired siren, and Rolaind Gillespie as Eleanor, the girl friend, all turn in brilliant performances.

Adapted from the stage comedy hit of the same name, the film vehicle has all the bright dialogue and hilarious situations of the play, the original plus a few new ones. Arden Gordon, style expert, has created a wardrobe of gowns which promises to establish any of the stars who wear them as one appeared before. Twenty different costumes are worn, each creating new modes in styles.

Also rendered Victorian settings by Cedric Gibbons and E. B. Willis are the best you'll see this year.

Patsy Kelly Comedy

Thelma Todd and Patsy Kelly the screen comediennes of the screen are supported by Lyle Talbot and Cram in their latest comedy riot "Maid's Night Out", a riot-ridden of unusual merit is "Rhythm on the Roof" a smart and tuneful bedroom-farce-comedy with a cast of famous Hollywood screen favorites. An interesting short reel round out a very fine program of screen entertainment.

Mr. Ray Fox accompanied them and spent the evening with her mother Mrs. Ann Rutin.

Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Redner spent Sunday afternoon with his father, Mr. H. Redner.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hubbs called Saturday evening at Mr. R. L. Redner's.

MINING MARKET

Toronto, Feb. 27—The mining section of Toronto stock exchange kept an eye on Wall Street today, disregarding the higher quotations on bar gold in London. Most of the senior golds were neglected and the secondary issues were content to hold their ground. Silver and Base metal stocks were slow.

The splurge in McWatters was somewhat flat following several sessions of activity, though the price holding a small advance. A half dozen penny stocks furnished the bulk of the business. The group including McMillan, Falconbridge, Bobjo and Sherp Creek. The latter was the morning feature, rising 14 cents to 1.13 and then dropping half the gain under profit-taking.

INDUSTRIAL MARKET

Toronto, Feb. 27—Industrial share prices sagged on Toronto Exchange today under a light demand for stocks and the influence of a soft New York tone. Practically all interested leaders showed fractional losses of 1-4 to 3-4 at early afternoon, including the oils, liquors, nickel, Port A. and C.P.R.

Dominion Tar continued to decline from its recent top, being nearly a point lower today and other construction stocks held unchanged. The food and allied issues boarded a few gains and banks and miscellaneous stocks continued slow and unchanged.

NEW YORK MARKETS

New York, Feb. 27— The stock market tried to work under the influence of a little more affable attitude toward the rails today but after regaining mid-week trade statistics traders turned a cold shoulder on the industrials.

Dome and International Nickel were slightly lower among Dominion stocks while McIntyre and Canadian Pacific held about even. On the curb, Lake Shore and Hiram Walker eased. Canadian government 4s yielded a share. Canadian funds remained unchanged at 100.00 cents.

Police News

Activities were at a rather low ebb in local police circles during the past 24 hours, no arrests being necessary and no serious motor accidents reported. Investigations into recent burglaries resulted in two local youths being apprehended both under the age of 16 years. The lads admitted three local burglaries it is said and are charged in local Juvenile Court later in the week.

Only three lonely and weary transients congested the cell block at the police station last night, they being afforded warm sleeping quarters after signing the register at the sergeant's desk. There has been a marked falling off of transients stopping in Belleville for the past month.

MADOC PLAYS HERE, COLLEGIANS SKATE

Coach Lester Shiels of the Belleville Collegiate hockey team was much disappointed last night when word came out of the North that the Intercholastic section winners had not yet been declared, following a protest by Marmora against Tweed which was upheld and the teams re-play Thursday night to declare a winner. However, Mr. Shiels was wide awake, and arranged a Collegiate night for tonight (Wednesday) including all students game with the fast Madoc High School team to start at 7.30 and followed by skating for the balance of the evening. One of the best sheets of ice is ready to greet Coach Shiels tonight, and therefore a merry throng will no doubt be on hand.

Blairgowrie which had given its position as about 1,000 miles east of Newfoundland. She left Swansea, Wales, ten days ago for Boston.

The Europa, from New York, headed for European ports.

The other ships, to resume their courses were the American Banker, combination passenger—cargo craft, London to New York, and the S. S. Bloemendyk, Rotterdam to New York.

At 10.36 last night Captain Oscar Speckter, master of the Europa, reported:

"Proceeding now at position of steamer Blairgowrie but not sighted vessel yet. Standing by until daybreak."

Hurricane Blowing

The Radiomarine Corporation station which received the first message asked Captain Scharf what the weather was like. He replied:

"Wind hurricane force with mountainous seas."

The Lands End radio station received distress signals from the Latvin steamer Johanne which said its steering gear had been disabled. The vessel gave its position as 45.20 north, 6.31 west, in the Bay of Biscay. The Latvian Mailer had been proceeding to its assistance.

The Norwegian steamer Ashuri reported he had lost its rudder west of Belle Ile En Mere, off the French coast.

Last Plea For Help

Halifax, Feb. 27—(CP)—A last plea for help from the storm-stricken British freighter Blairgowrie saying she could not last "five minutes longer" was picked up today by the liner Europa before she gave up the search for the sinking steamer in the Atlantic gales.

The doomed ship's message, relayed by land by the Europa and picked up by Canada's east coast radio signal service, said 32 3.00 a.m. E.S.T. the Blairgowrie Bloemendyk rolled the helpless Blairgowrie over on her side.

Rolls Over to Side

The speeding rescue ship was a scant half hour's run from her position then but when she reached the spot there was no trace of the freighter—presumably sunk with her 29 hands.

"On Blairgowrie's position; 'something gone,' said the last message before the Europa turned away with the American Banker and the Bloemendyk which had rushed toward the spot 1,000 miles off Newfoundland when the battered ship reported her steering gear carried away and her holds filling with water.

About to Sink

Before that the Europa had radioed she would "hang on until the last" in the hope to appear farther away. The Europa's three o'clock message was:

"Blairgowrie says she cannot last five minutes more.

Lying right on side. Very rough seas coming right aboard."

ACCUSES 'PRINCE' OF DIVORCE PLOT

Mrs. Wilma Gould Testifies She Was Drugged By Admirers

New York, Feb. 27 (AP)—Score one point for the $500,000 damage suit of Wilma Winifred Gould; it got a spark of interest out of the yawning jury Tuesday when Mrs. Gould, "Prince Michael Romanoff" to the susceptible—by bringing in the name of Michael Romanoff.

In Supreme Court yesterday Mrs. Gould told the jury she knew the "mystery man of Europe" intimately but she denied planning to divorce Michael so she could marry him.

Mrs. Gould is suing her brother-in-law, former Rep. Norman J. Gould; New York lawyer and head of a detective agency on conspiracy charges, alleging they hired "Prince Mike" to "get rid of" their wife and get evidence for a divorce suit by her husband, Edward B. Gould.

The woman said she first knew Sir Basil intimately, had dined with him as well as other notables, "including David Lloyd George."

"I walked with him in the garden and conferred with gulls on many occasions," she said.

That eventful night she spent in the apartment of "Prince Michael Romanoff," when her husband and others broke in and found her lying on a bed, was described by Mrs. Gould in the Supreme Court today.

"I was drugged," she testified. "I remember nothing until I found myself lying on my left side, covered with a sheet to the neck, as awakened by a terrific noise.

The "Romanoff" was the loud knocking of her husband and his companions, she said, and it prompted the "Prince" to dash post haste into the bathroom.

Mrs. Gould claims it was all a tableau arranged so her husband, Edward Gould, Seneca Falls, N.Y., manufacturer, could obtain evidence for divorcing her. She seeks $500,000 damages from her brother-in-law, Norman J. Gould, New York lawyer and a private detective for libel and conspiracy.

"Prince Mike", who gets his title from his alleged Russian association and whose real name is Harry Gerguson, entered the courtroom very slowly today as Mrs. Gould was telling about the "raid".

Cross-examined by Leon M. Prince, defence attorney, Mrs. Gould went over the brief period during which Gerguson courted her. He virtually swept her off her feet with his attentions, she said, proposing marriage to her on February 2, 1931. He met her but a few days before.

Amateur Officials Blamed For Ills in Athletic Code

By W. M. GLADISH

Former Secretary Ontario Branch A.A.U. of C.

Toronto, Feb. 26—In a recent public statement, President W. A. Ivy of the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada made the unfortunate fact that attacks from the outside are causing A.A.U. officials deep concern; but that the most serious threat was within the amateur organization in its growing tendency on the part of individuals "to turn sharp corners" in the interpretation of legislation which their own elected associations had helped to enact.

In the opinion of this writer much of the trouble in amateurism to-day is due to the fact that the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada and some of its allied governing bodies have been afraid of the times, and various details of past control have become inoperable.

The constitution, by-laws and regulations of the Canadian Union are not only an obstacle that they are always trying, but they have become so involved, complicated and contradictory by repeated amendment and consideration, that to meet some slight flurry of the moment that any interpretation can be read into the book by merely turning the pages until the favorable clause is found.

Need Clarity in Laws

How can sports be governed without a definite, clear-cut code of printed form by which all sport sponsors and participants? Ignorance of the regulations is the kind and file of team players and individual athletes across Canada is appalling and the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada is directly to blame.

The Amateur Union and the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association apparently have failed to realize that the one-time amateur club "angel" has disappeared—the individual sportsman who dug deep into his own pocket to sponsor a home-town team for the love of sport or as a hobby. His place has been taken by commercial interests for obvious reasons and the commercial sponsors have come to stay. It is a good thing they have appeared because, without them, plenty of sport would now have no sponsor at all.

Money Big Factor

"It costs money to run any kind of a team—almost any hockey squad, these days, represents an investment running into four figures when optional, but leading professionals and operating costs are considered. One fault is that players everywhere have graduated from the idea that they should or might buy their own outfits. Buying one's own skates, sticks, sweater, harness and whatnot doesn't exactly fit into the "big business" theme of amateur sport of the present day.

Revenue at the box office is increasingly important and so the clubs have gone out after "box office amateurs" to obtain gate receipts with which to take part in the playdowns prescribed by none other than the amateur authorities themselves. Here is the nub—thing to a vicious circle in which the sport governing bodies are included although they don't seem to realize it as indicated by their hampering annoying and antiquated regulations. Not only have commercial sponsors replaced sport enthusiasts, but amateurism has become commercial in itself, despite the ideals of amateurism.

Amateurs Must Eat

Amateur governors of the Dominion apparently fail to realize that even a hot-pure must eat and have a place to sleep. Sport heads appear to be so far removed from the amateur proletariat that they do not understand the economic and present economic conditions. They fail to see the situation from the viewpoint of the athlete who wonders where he can get an honest job. The attitude of the writer has been—if a hockey player can get a real job by reason of the fact that he can play reasonably good hockey, then good luck and more power to him. He is only getting the living to which he is entitled and hockey, or baseball or lacrosse qualifications are just as proper as trade qualifications.

At the present time, the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, an affiliate of the Amateur Union, is not doing all in its power to encourage amateur hockey throughout the Dominion. The writer holds no brief for the hockey clubs in the Maritime Provinces—it is said that they have played loosely with "the amateur code — but the C.A.H.A. has done its share in wrecking what is recognized as amateur hockey down east.

Need New Constitution

The true aim of a sports-governing body should be; How can we make it possible, for everybody to play—and, at the same time, earn a living—rather than how are we going to prohibit.

Amateur sport in Canada to-day is sadly in need of new constitutions, modern to the last degree.

President Bill Fry has declared that "without a neutral national governing body such as the union, there would be chaos within a year." Quite true; very true. There will be a host of centrist authority. But to have the respect and recognition to which it is entitled any governing body in sport these days must be as up-to-date as the age in which it functions, and give full consideration to the viewpoints of the one man affected by its deliberations—the young and old sports enthusiast who calls the slushy puck or tries to run out a home run.

REGGIE J. McNAMARA OF SIX-DAY BIKE FAME

Known to six-day bicycle race fans all over the world, this 50-year-old veteran of the wooden oval stands out as an example of how much the human system can absorb in knocks, shocks, and continuous punishment.

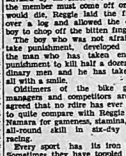
Reggie J. McNamara is undoubtedly a wonder man. An old man, a veteran of 30 years or racing, yet still the king of his chosen field.

His demonstration, year after year, that age is no barrier to success if you have what it takes." Twice the all-round champion of America. He has participated in more than one hundred six-day competitions. (Almost two years of continuous riding!)

He is the holder of many world records, ranging from one to 50 miles; he has raced in every country in the world where six-day races are held. He has to his credit 16 first place positions in these grinds.

He has had his collarbone broken 13 times, innumerable rib fractures and his jaw smashed twice. On several occasions he has suffered from fractures of the skull. Grit seems to have been the predominating characteristic in his make-up ever since his youth. Bitten on the finger, in his native habitant, Australia, by a snake when a boy and advised by an older brother that the member must come off or he would die, Reggie laid the finger over a log and allowed the elder boy to chop off the bitten finger.

The boy who was not afraid to take punishment, developed into the man who has taken enough punishment to kill half a dozen ordinary men and he has taken it all with a smile.



Oldtimers of the bike game, managers and competitors are all agreed that no rider has ever lived to quite compare with Reggie McNamara for gameness, stamina, and all-round skill in six-day bike racing.

Every sport has its iron man. Sometimes they have toppled from their pedestal by the advent of a more colorful, more spectacular figure, but it seems almost beyond the bounds of possibility that six-day bicycle racing will again ever produce a man of the all-round caliber of Reggie McNamara.

SOCCER SIDELIGHTS

By CENTRAL PRESS CANADIAN

London, Feb. 26—A veteran will be back who has played on the London centre-line-up for many a season. So long, in fact that Fulham could not say the same without Gibbons on its field this veteran however is beginning to show that time is taking her toll. It seems of late that he is slowing up and he has certainly taken on some weight that he did not formerly carry during the football season. Fulham has never enjoyed the measure of success that has been the lot of some other London clubs, but despite their failure to win fortune's smile, they have from time to time provided a few surprises in past years. The present manager at Fulham is Jimmy Hagan, the ex-Bolton player who has seen much service as a coach on the European continent. Gibbons may not have many more seasons left in the acting line but he has been a remarkably stalwart defender for Fulham during his career, and the Fulhamites will still admire some time before they find a player to replace their dependable Gibbons.

Behomoths Are Latest Vogue In Boxing

By BILL BRAUCHER

Central Press Canadian Sports Writer

New York, Feb. 26—Three groups of heavyweights will meet here March 15 for the mythical heavyhangs-over-thy-head championship of Third Ave. and Thirty-third St.

The first group, reading from left to right, is Primo Carnera, former heavyweight champion of the world. The opposing group is composed of Joy to Isidore, Ray Impellitteri.

Maestro Jimmy (Boy Bandit) Johnston, whose matchmaking on behalf of Madison Square Garden has elicited, not a few caterwauling complaints from the carping experts lately, really has gone out and done something big.

Why, This is Tremendous

In signing Carnera to fight and frown at the grownup Impellitteri feller, James is promoting the feat of placing 548 pounds of men in the same ring at once—and that's a bigger boot than Tex Rickard ever dreamed of.

Impellitteri, who protrudes six feet and seven and one-half inches into the stratosphere and weighs lately 270 pounds, is the biggest person in the cauliflower business today.

Jack Preem, who lacks only one-half inch of being as far up there as limpy, panies Impellitteri at 6-2 during his eating season, which starts on Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, in odd and even years. In view of total clearance and tonnage, half an inch isn't much to limpy's favor, though that fraction of space means a great deal in billiards.

Though a colossal match from the viewpoint of animated bulk, it doesn't appear to be another Dempsey-Firpo fight, even if the ring should unexpectedly hold up under the stress. Carnera is pretty far ahead of the 24-year-old giant from Cold Springs, N.Y., in point of past performance. There have been moments when the Alp looked pretty good in there, notably against Sharkey.

Primo has a great edge in experience, sad though some of it has been. It might be said that he learned as he went along, picking up a little here and there about fighting after his arrival in America for that well-remembered circus tour.

Impellitteri has beaten nobody of note. The young Italian-American giant (he was born in Newburgh, N.Y.) has great strength, and though he started as an all-around athlete in high school at Peekskill, N.Y., his fighting experience is sadly short. He is much slower than Primo, though they wear about the same size violin cases for shoes.

Impy has been hurried along with a view to quick liquidation. About a year and a half ago he knocked out Tommy Loughran in the sixth round, only to have the bout ordered continued. After regaining his consciousness Tommy made the big fellow look pretty bad. The few fights he has had have been unimportant. He is railed by The Ring magazine among the fourth flight of heavies, which includes such inand-outers as Abe Feldman, Al Roture, Red Barry, Steve Dudas and others.

Carnera rates just below Max Baer, to whom he lost the title last summer. Between Primo and Impy in the ratings is a whole herd of heavyweights, including Group 3, headed by Klingbeil Levinsky and Jack Petersen.

Hailing Impy so far below Petersen, the British champion, may be a mistake. If it isn't, Carnera fights for the thing in one round, possibly two if he doesn't lose his temper.

MRS. RUTH BABE RUTH JULIA RUTH

Ready for almost anything except a season of idleness, Babe Ruth is preparing to entrain for the south along with Mrs. Ruth and his daughter Julia, still undecided about where he will spend the 1935 baseball season. The big fellow still wants a manager's berth, which has been conspicuous by its success in not.

Ready for almost anything except evading him, but whether he will forget his repeated declaration of retirement from all but masterminding even he does not know. He's going down there to train anyway and he intimates that he will get into playing conditions. After that, well maybe and maybe not. Babe for once is all mixed up.

HAMILTON RINK AGAIN IN DOMINION CURLING TANKARD

For the second consecutive year the Caledon Rink from the Hamilton (Ont.) Thistle Club won the Ontario Tankard. They will enter a week of enthusiastic curling in Toronto, where the Ontario Curling Association staged their annual gathering of curlers. The Hamilton Thistles will represent Ontario for the third consecutive year in the competition for the Macdonald Brier Trophy, emblematic of Dominion supremacy in the curling world. In their previous appearances in the championship race they have failed to capture the coveted trophy. This year may be their year. Charlie Conacher is often referred to in sport write-ups as a giant, but the wing man is pure shrimp. He weighs 196 pounds, but is well proportioned and carries the weight easily. Jackson, his wing mate, weighs 193.

LOOK OUT FOR THOSE . . .

Apropos of the difficulties which faced the Boston Bruins with dog-racing interests almost ousted them from Fenway Park, a stockholder in one of the National league clubs declared that dog racing is an imminent threat to baseball. Unless something is done to curb the racedog fans they will outdraw and eventually ruin baseball financially he predicts.

CORBETT'S RIGHT EXPLODES ON VAN KLAVERN'S EAR

Young Corbett of Fresno, Calif., veteran welterweight, took a decision over Rep Van Klavern, aging Dutch Windmill in their rematch bout in San Francisco. Corbett has shown himself still one of the best of a comparatively poor crop of welterweights and after winning from the Dutchman looks around for new heights to scale. Babe Ruth Returns to Boston As Assistant Manager of Braves At Reported Salary of $35,000

Starred For Yanks For Fifteen Consecutive Seasons

GOT START IN BOSTON

Ruth Becomes Shareholder of The Boston Braves

By BILL KING

Boston, Feb. 27.—(AP)—The old slugger is coming home!

Home to the folks who love him best just as that other Boston sports hero, the mighty John L. Sullivan, did so many years ago when the rest of America told him to step aside for youth.

And as New England hailed the returning John L. so will it greet the Babe when George Herman Ruth hits town as much beloved member of Boston Braves and assistant manager.

Although the Babe gained most of his baseball glory during his 15 years with the Yankees he was always the idol of the New England fans.

When Sullivan returned home his admirers unhitched the horses from his hack and pulled it themselves. Perhaps they will do the same for Ruth.

Boston learned to love Ruth when he was a careless, spend-thrift youth with a rawhide left arm, long before he started knocking baseballs over fences.

When they talk about pitching feats hereabouts, one of the first mentioned is the day Manager Babe registered over Sherrod Smith in the second game of the 1916 world series between the Red Sox and Brooklyn. That game went 14 innings and is the longest world series struggle in the book.

Two years later when Ed Barrow the boy had such a prominent part in Ruth's career was managing the Red Sox, Babe won two world series games from Chicago Cubs.

Never other than Boston fans can tell offhand that Ruth's pitching mark for successive scoreless innings, 29, still stands.

Under the terms of the contract announced jointly by Ruth and Emil Fuchs, President of the Boston club, Ruth will share in the profits of the club, if any, and is given an option to purchase stock.

Ruth's salary as John Bill McKechnie, present manager of the Braves has his full confidence, and will be in control of the team "unless circumstances" show it is well be better for Ruth to be in full charge on the field.

Without committing himself to any figure, Fuchs said the terms under which Ruth goes to the Braves for 1935 and more for 1935 than he received from the Yankees in 1934, which was $35,000.

The Babe said he was delighted to be going back to the major leagues as a member of the Braves and a skinny left-handed pitcher in 1914 with the Red Sox.

N.H.L. Clubs Bunched Closely As Bruins Win and N. Y. Lose

Torrid Race Being Staged In American Section, Hawks Rangers and Bruins all Bunched Together

By A. E. FULFORD

The way things are going now it may be March 18, last night of the National Hockey League schedule, before New York Rangers, Boston Bruins and Chicago Black Hawks decide which is to represent the American division in the league championship series.

With each team only eight games from the schedule's end the race is as tight today as it has been all year has been. Rangers and Bruins are in the lead with 47 points each and Hawks are trailing by only half a game.

Lester Patrick's New Yorkers had to move over and make room for Bruins when they lost 3-1 to Montreal in Montreal while Bruins were shutting out Detroit 5-0 in Boston Garden. Rangers' defeat caused more hopes than ever after they lost a 2-0 decision to Hawks in New York.

Rangers met a Maroon team three times their size last night at the Garden but made the mistake of allowing them two goals in the first period. "Tommy" Cook's outfit promptly threw up their defences, and dug in behind to seal with the victory. Rangers were able to gather in only Earl Siebert's goal in the second period.

Cy Wentworth beat Dave Kerr from Herb Lewis's passout in the first Maroon tally and Bob Gracie shot Cook's counter from a scrum in the second while Harold Starr was in the penalty box. Judge Northcott and Gracie were the New Yorkers up the ice in the second last minute of the game and Northcott passed to his youthful teammate for the third Maroon goal.

Eagles were no match for Bruins in the streaky play at Boston and when they had opportunities for goals failed to make the most of them. Major Kaminsky, Art Jackson, Barry got a goal each in the first and third period and Charlie Sands made the other in the second.

Big Vernon Ayres, St. Louis defenceman, was the villain of the peace, getting three minor penalties in the first period and a major in the third for fighting with Pinkie Davis, who received the same sentence.

Tiny Thompson had to kick out only 21 shots in the game to register his eighth shutout of the season. It brought him even with Alec Connell of Maroons in the shutout records.

Americans had to come from behind twice to beat Red Wings in the Madison Square Garden game, featured by a fine defence play from both teams. And then they won the game on a freak goal in the second period. Driver's drive from an almost impossible angle bounced into the nets off Normie Smith's pads.

Sweeney Schriner, the rookie from Calgary, won the game for the New Yorkers with his two goals. The first came in the opening period on even things up after Cooney Weiland had beaten Roy Worters on the second early in the middle frame after Syd Howe had given Detroit the lead again late in the first.

Art Chapman, the Winnipeg boy who is tied with Frank Boucher of Rangers for the league point lead with 28, made the play for both the goals scored.

Attendances were disappointing at both New York and Boston, 7,500 watching American win and 7,500 watching Bruins take a victory. Premier Desmond turned out at Montreal to see Maroons and Rangers.

WOOLER MOVES TO FIRST PLACE

Defeat of Trenton Assures Play-off Position in District

Wooler moved into first place tie with Brighton on Monday night when they downed the Trenton Intermediates 4-2. The Wooler team a play-off berth in the Trenton and District League. A last period rally gave the High School a tie with Smithfield in the opening game, but in the extra time and the score ended 8-8. The scholars were leading 5-3 until Smithfield scored twice in Allan Lamore and Jack Kidd who were playing in Smithfield. Trenton entry in the Belleville City League. Roy Wooler and Lois Mac Donald in Belleville but were able to return in time to play with their team in the game for the triple header. The Cities Service, who they will oppose in Belleville have the chances of Frankford for the play-offs, when they handed them a whitewash.

The first game between the High School and Smithfield ended in a scoring bee. The first period ended two all but the Smithfield entente outscored the scholars 2-1 in the second. In the final canto Smithfield scored three times the students came back with three in a row to get in the lead. Before the game ended each had netted eight counters and in ten minutes overtime the score was still deadlocked. The tie gave the students 12 points and they are a strong contender for the Northern Advocate cup for the championship. Wade, Gain and Mackillop scored a pair for the school boys with Derry and Mitchell also getting in the act for Smithfield. Mitchell led with two. The others were counted by Corbett, Hamilton, Russ Mc-Niderdy, Grant and P. Hansen.

High School—goal, Wade; defence Mackillop and Kerr; centre, Staples; wings, Beale and Derry, Subs, Dadswell, Gain, Hamilton and Lamore.

Smithfield—goal, Ireland; defence, Lemoine and Mitchell; centre, Corbett; wings, Niddery and H. Hansen, Subs, Davis, Bedal, Mc-Niderdy, Russ Tells, Russ Tate and Beskwick.

Referee—Walter Bowen.

WOOLER—COLLEGE 9

Packing too much speed for their rivals, the Trenton Cottons fell bridge before the Wooler lads in the final game to be defeated 8-0 for Bryant's fifth shutout of the season. He has the best defensive team in the league ahead of him and they belong considerably. Roy Smith was the chief marksman with three and he did not start in the first period of the game as he was in Belleville. He will probably get the ice to hang home a goal as his opening number. Tom Rattan speedy defenceman from Wooler also counted three. Friday Rattan and Oates got the remainder. The Cottons were inclined to bunch too much. Bun Lott was the best for them and after playing a fine game in Belleville. If the Cottons put him on the wings with Ted Hamilton the centers would go through the defence. Bun Lott is retired from hockey. He played forward they let him do all the work. Bruce Burtt and Ted Bridle played well on the right line with Art Scarlett doing the rushing. Bridle's checking, together with his three counters, places him in the leading goal-getter's seat. Hamilton also played well together with each team on top with three points.

Wooler—goal, Bryant; defence, Rattan and C. Rattan; centre, Oates; wings, Scriven and McCosh. Subs. Pulman, Steenburg, Carm Smith, Wade, Hurst and Smith.

CoKens—goal, Steenburg; defence, Hamlin and Fralick; centre, Parker; wings, Burtt and Roberts. Subs. Coughlin, Johnson, Bowen and Lott.

BISONS ADVANCE TO SECOND RUNG

Patterson Scores Third Period Goal to Elevate Buffalo

PORT ERIE, Ont., Feb. 27—(CP)—Buffalo Bisons were back in second place in the International Hockey League again today but their occupancy of holding the berth alone for more than 24 hours appeared slim.

They eke out of a three-way third place tie with London and Cleveland last night when Patterson scored in the third period for a 3-2 win over Cleveland. London and Falcons both play tonight however and have a chance to draw even with the Bisons.

Both Falcons and Bisons played a fine game last night and the stellar work of goalies in both nets kept the score down.

Tiny Thompson started the play for the winning goal. Falcons played all the first period to avoid being scoreless game of the season and Thompson finally broke through.

He relayed it to Lloyd Gross who in turn slipped it to Patterson who scored with a backhand flip shot.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

Owing to complications of an unadjustable nature setting in the final games for the championship of the Belleville City League will not commence until next Tuesday. How that so much cold weather is in our midst, however, the clubs concerned could have made arrangements and proceeded along with this series without much trouble. The complications arose when the Trenton club requested that they also be asked to play on Monday, Wednesday or Friday owing to the fact that their players are also competing in the Trenton Town League. The request was granted when the Trenton club made special efforts to be on hand for last Monday night's game. Arrangements were tentative to have the city league final series open tomorrow night, but owing to a Dominion-wide convention held by the StewartWarner Corporation, the local club requested to have the series start on Friday night. This being impossible owing to the Trenton angle, President Rollins took the only course left and named Tuesday as the opening night for the city league finals to commence.

It might be an excellent idea if President Rollins scoured the community for a set of neutral officials for the series as it is bound to be a tidy affair, no matter how it goes, and as it is getting timekeepers, two goal umpires and a pair of smart referees are all that will be necessary connected with either organization, should the services of neutrals be secured to these positions. Naturally this series will be a feature of the season and takes possession of the Rowsome Trophy, a fine large affair which is now on display over in my league. Further honors go to the Belleville club for the year as they will be invited to represent Belleville in a post season play-off series between the winners of the Trenton Town League, the Central League and the Prince Edward County loop winners for the Burrows Cup. Both the Belleville heads of the above leagues have signified their willingness to send the various group winners to Belleville for a post season series.

There is one slight hitch in the above plan, however. For instance would it be a right thing for Trenton to set-up if Trenton should happen to win the city league, to represent Belleville, as winners of the local city league. In the past Trenton acted in this after hand if Trenton should win the local loop, instead of their going to Belleville happen to be members of the competing Trenton Town League. Again the 1935 post season series would suffer. In reality it looks as though the executive of the local city league should be asked to provide a team, in the post season series, if Trenton happens to win the city league honors. "Just a precautionary suggestion, that's all."

In looking over the roster of the Alemite, of the S.E.A.C. teams as they clashed the other night, we find that no less than 17 players appearing on the ice received their primary hockey education in the local Ki-Y League, nine of the Alemites and eight of the S. E. A. C. aggregation (Not a bad record at all.) While on the subject it might be well to state that six of the Grills team received their early hockey tuition in the Ki-Y loop also. Although the Ki-Y leagues usually play their games on Friday night, due to the number of public attendance, these sides provide good entertainment, especially the Junior series that opened at the Arena this week.

Just when everything seemed ready to go in the C.O.B.S.A. bailiwick, word is received from Toronto down the Trent Valley loop mogul gets together and decides to oppose us again with the same old bunch of players but at the same time made it clear they would have no objection to the ability of the club to do so.

It was time the people were made aware of the fact of unemployment, said Ross Gray (Lib. Hamilton West), when approached for something from the eight-hour day and the 48-hour week. In the city of Sarnia the employment was fairly steady and large plants in the city were operating on the basis of an increase of unemployed was steadily increasing. It was higher in 1934 than in 1933.

Election Like 'Thief'

People had lost confidence in the Government and there was evidence of that, Mr. Bennett, the confidence in himself. He had said the election was going on like a thief in the night." That could only mean he was afraid of the election and would try to get it over and stealthily.

Hon. Raymond D. Morand, (Cons., Essex East) said Mr. Macaulay's proposals were interesting particularly as they were made in the absence of and without a word of support from Liberal Leader Mackenzie King, who was represented in his resolution. He wondered if Mr. Macaulay proposed to continue a campaign of his own, appealing to one section of the people while Mr. King was trying to get the votes of the believers in Laissez-faire.

The Liberal platform of 1919 contained clauses pledging Unemployment, sickness, accident, invalidity and other advanced social measures, Mr. Morand said. There had been nine years in office and hesitation of the prosperity of Canada and not of the co-operation it enjoyed from the provinces, and yet nothing had been done to give effect to the platform.

Regretful Help to Liberals

Mr. Woodsworth said his followers would support the Liberal motion "with regret" but "gladly."

It must be admitted, said Mr. Woodsworth, that Canada was not ready to put forward any permanent resolution.

Other countries, replied Mr. Woodsworth, weathered the storm better than Canada, the United Kingdom for one.

There was grown up recently in Canada a suspicion the government was attempting to place the municipalities in a position to evade all responsibility for relief, Mr. Woodsworth said. "Let the Dominion Government or parliament to progue before a well-thought-out plan is brought down to relieve conditions that confront us."

Statistics Misleading

The only reply came from the Conservatives was a stream of statistics, which were misleading, he needed but action."

If unemployment continued at the present scope there will be more crime, inefficiency among youths, general restlessness, Mr. Woodsworth predicted.

"We should not be forgotten the great bulk of the unemployed were idle through no fault of their own," Mr. Woodsworth.

The C.C.F. leader asked the government to give an indication of present conditions could continue. "Can we expect these conditions to continue and law abiding? We can not so on much longer and I hope this session we now on will give full consideration to this practical question."

Fish Story Relief

The only variation from the long discussion on unemployment came at the private members' hour when Hon. Gene Sillinger, Minister of Game of Fisheries, agreed to send to the fishermen of Ontario proposals to prohibit catching of salmon in purse seines near the mouth of the Fraser River. The proposals was in the form of an amendment to the Fisheries Act introduced by Arthur Reid (Lib. New Westminster). Mr. Stirling said he could not accept the amendment in its present form and no objection to its being investigated by the committee.

or all responsibility for relief. The federal government had rejected the offer for the ostensible reason it was not made in good faith but was not the case but if there were doubts the best way of testing the Quebec Premier's sincerity and at same time demonstrating the sincerity of the federal government would have been acceptance of the offer.

Prime Minister R. B. Bennett was in a quandary, said Mr. Rennfrew over his reform programme. He had expected Liberals to oppose it and many disappointed in that did not do so. They had to do about it. He was at a loss for an election issue if he had hoped to make one of unemployment.

Capitalists Bemoaned

No solution for the unemployment problem could be evolved under the capitalist system, said Mr. Woodsworth's opinion. Shared by Angus MacInnis, (C.C.F., Vancouver East) and Michael Luchkovich (U.F.A., Vegreville). These three said that it would not be for the motion because the government had failed to deal adequately with the problem but at the same time made it clear they had no confidence in the ability of the party to do so.

payment of $2,000 to the unnamed official and later, on the recommendation of Mr. Henry, a treasury warrant was signed paying him another $500.

The former Premier said he was acting treasurer at the time due to the illness of the late F. A. Dunlop, former Provincial Treasurer. While he was not trying to shield himself behind the dead colleague, Mr. Henry stated he understood the payment was taken from a certain fund and the official had placed his I.O.U.'s in the fund.

Criticism of Criminals

Criticism of the government's dismissal of certain servants and its handling of the Liquor Control Act administration was maintained by Mr. Henry's address.

The dismissals of servants the government "is setting up something worse than the spoils system in the United States," he said, adding, "I never heard of such a callous way of dismissing men and women after 20 years of public life."

Condemning the extension of Sunday golf courses as established in the Province, he declared if his government had been in power it would refuse to receive beer-sale authorities should have been standard in Ontario for at least two years.

Elimination of the permit regulations for the sale of beer, he said, and he also scored adoption of the single-purchase permit for liquor.

Concluding, he moved the following amendment to the address:

"That this House regrets that the administration of the Liquor Control Board have failed to maintain the control of the distribution of liquor which has been such a marked feature during recent years."

The Premier started to speak before the six o'clock adjournment, but carried forward, he dealt with reports of the various Liquor Control Board administration appointed.

Reorganization of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway following the Racine report was announced in a government order of $28,000 monthly, he said, adding, "Perhaps this report is the reason why the name of the railway is the Ontario Northland."

Appointment of the Niagara Parks Commission brought an annual saving of $15,000 and that of the Provincial Air Service effected a saving of $38,000 yearly, he said. Changes in Hydro administration brought a reduction in costs of $1,000,000, the Premier said.

Salary Saving Claimed

Since his Government took office it has reduced personnel by 1,100 and effected a salary saving of $1,557,664, he continued. Computing general financing policy of his administration he said that of Mr. Henry, the Premier said it cost $438,000 for the Province's investment to issue $65,000,000 in bonds but his Government floated $65,000,000 and the saving cost was printing.

Turning to liquor administration, he asserted his faith in the local option principle and government control, declaring a referendum on beer sale as long as his administration had the power. He charged the Conservatives before the general election had failed to implement the brick restaurant owners of Ontario by sending out 1,000 questionnaires and these had indicated the Government intended to give them beer and wine privileges.

Mr. Macaulay himself is opposed to the Government's intention to investigate alleged purchase by the Government of hospital supplies, Premier Hepburn informed that between July, when the administration took office and December 31, end of the fiscal year, the Government had spent enough money for hospitals to do them at least three years.

Supplies

"And these supplies, probably, are all there in the month of October so as to make it look as if the Government were responsible," he said.

"What nonsense," interposed Mr. Rowbotham.

"Well, we will find out all about it in the session," Mr. Macaulay returned.

He questioned the Premier as to the possibility of the next session of the Legislature having a longer session, and the intention to have it was dependent on the Federal Government's attitude, Premier Hepburn said.

Mr. Macaulay attacked alleged preferential purchases of Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture, and Hon. J. A. Faulkner, Minister of Lands.

He wound up his address by declaring co-operation by the Opposition if the Government attempted the solution of the social inequalities of the day.

Lift Suspension From Terriers

Vancouver, Feb. 27.—(CP)—The Canadian Amateur Lacrosse Association today lifted the suspensions imposed last year on the Victoria Terriers who Mrs. Helens of Vancouver and awarded the Ontario team the Mann Cup, symbolic of Canadian senior championship.

Terriers who defeated New Westminster Salmonbellies at Barrie, Ontario, last year by 14 goals to 13 after Mrs. Helens and St. Helens were suspended when they persisted in going to Barrie to play a professional exhibition series at Vancouver which the C.A.L.A. refused to sanction.

The suspensions were lifted as a result of a Dominion-wide telegraphic vote of the executive committee of the C.A.L.A. President Dan Mackenzie of New Westminster presided.

At the annual meeting in Barrie next April, year, President Mackenzie said a committee composed of A. E. Lynn of Penetang, W. J. Dopp of Toronto, and the President, was appointed to prepare and bring up to date the constitution. Two additional members have been added to the committee, the president said. They are Hon. W. A. Boys of Brantford, Secretary and H. A. Gillchrist of Calgary.

LOVE SCHOOL

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

"I suppose you wonder why I recall Main Stanwood, and those days," she drew herself up defiantly. After all she hadn't meant to pry into his affairs. "It was a mistake," she said.

"It's of no consequence," he carelessly assured her, and bending over a silver humidor, he selected a cigarette. But the thinned edge of his lips as they closed on the cigarette, gave him away. He was angry.

"Of no consequence! Is that all you have to say to me!" His head met her—serenely. It seemed unbearable that he had ever held her in his arms, kissed her, and then left her for a young man who was trying to make love to her friend and mean.

Hunter stood silently a moment, his dark face closed against her. Then he sat down the little silver lighter he had been holding to his cigarette "I owe you an apology for last night," he said in a stilted way.

Faith backed to the desk, simply arching forward as she stared at him, her hand framing the words. "An apology!"

He didn't avoid her widened grey eyes. "I, for my head last night," he said briefly. "I'm sorry."

"You're sorry!" Her throat felt choked and dry. She pressed the palms of her hands hard against the bronze rim of the desk.

His handsome face grew bleak, when next he spoke, it was in the same careful tones of a man trying to be fair with himself and someone else.

"I don't expect you to understand," he said with a trace of irony in his voice. "Your innocent beauty — your appeal — got me off my guard, that's all. I suppose I should feel rotten, but I once told you I did not believe in love — or marriage — except as a social duty. Nothing of that is changed," he ended with a little shrug.

"Faith!"

"I shouldn't have read it, perhaps," she went on recklessly. "In polite society, one doesn't read things not meant for one. But one does marry in polite society, even though it is only as a social duty."

Hunter's white shocked face didn't stop her. "Well, I'm not a social duty," she blazed at him. "I'm a nobody that was thrust on you and in the kindness of your heart you took pity on me. Was that a reason to lead me like this? I don't want your pity. I won't live with you. I'd rather go back to New York and tell the police I'm the girl they were hunting for. Mrs. Hunter Barclay! They couldn't drag me through the mud half as much as you have—" Faith struggled as Hunter caught her by the wrist.

"Listen to me," he said sternly. "Whatever either of us want, no longer matters. There's been enough scandal. In the eyes of the world you're my wife, and you're going to remain so for the present." His black brows drew straight and thin across the clouded blue of his eyes. "If you don't like it, you'll be harshly, that I shall give you no further cause for regret."

Faith sank into a chair, her breath in her throat, her heart, she knew. He would stay. In spite of her pain, her humiliation, she belonged to him. Whatever happened now, she belonged to him. She raised her head faintly. "All right, I'll stay."

"Good." Hunter's expression cleared. He moved over as if to touch her, and thought better of it. He straightened, his hands in his pockets, looking down at her.

"I'm leaving back in the lily-shaped chair, upholstered in dark green satin patterned with Napoleonic crowns in gold. She smoothed the pale gold waves of her hair with a weary motion. "What do you want me to do?" Men were strange. They got over things so quickly. Now that he had his way, Hunter was starting her quite cheerfully, as if she were a work of art.

"You'll have to meet a few people", he said in a matter of fact voice. "We'll start with Thérèse de Lane—the Countess de Lane. She's an old friend of mine, and an awfully good sort."

Faith still shaken by the force of her emotion, smiled wanly. There was no way of hiding herself now, any lower. And the idea of meeting Thérèse Countess faintly thrilled her.

Hunter strolled to the window, his black hair starkly shining in the sunlight. "Theresa is one of the best people in Europe," he said. "Knows everyone and everything. She'll give you pointers."

Faith glanced down at her pink gown. It was one that Hunter had ordered for her from a model house in New York, and she considered it as the most flattering she had worn in Paris. Perhaps this countess was in town with him, too, she thought. Would he always be surrounded by greedy brilliant women trying to steal him from her?

"We're lunching with Madame de Lane at Fouquet's," he said, turning from the window. With an upward twist of his wrist, he consulted his watch. Restless.

Faith sat in silence, watching him. She should be accustomed by now to the strange tricks fate had played on her since that tragic night when poor Agnes had started it all by throwing herself out of a window.

"Will you be ready in an hour?" Hunter asked her consciously. It was his way of implying that the scene between them was over, and that they had nothing else to talk about. And he never left the door.

So that was it, Faith realized. How little she knew really of his life, his interests! Perhaps he meant the countess to teach her the hard glittering philosophy of a woman of the world. Give her "pointers," as he'd put it. Faith's sudden laugh was mirthless.

There was one thing apparently he hadn't thought of. He might ask her to divorce him, but he couldn't have their marriage annulled—now.

Faith Disappoints Hunter

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

Faith hadn't dreamed there were so many things a girl had to learn before she could become a well polished woman of the world. You had to have a background, it seemed,—if not of family—of a thousand and one delicately manufactured evidences of good taste, good form, social assurance.

But it was what she had always wanted. And in her relief not to find the Countess de Lane, another Gertrude Stevens menacing her Hall hold on Hunter, Faith eagerly willingly put herself under the older woman's guidance.

Madame de Lane, in her early forties, was a witty and arresting personage, her light brown hair piled high and pushed forward over her forehead to the thin pencil arch of her brows, the elegant carmine of her lips in perpetual animation. Her charm was as elusive as an expensive perfume, and her costumes, in their studied simplicity made other women look overdressed.

"Chérie, you're like love, my dear," she told Faith. "It should never be overdone."

There were moments when the cynical wisdom of the French noblewoman and Hunter's courteous aloofness, nearly drove Faith frantic. She felt she was just a school girl being tolerated while her betters did things she should have known: French and brides only ride in a car; how to listen intelligently to comments on the latest books, plays, politics; how to discriminate in foods and wines. She couldn't even select her own clothes. The great French dressmakers—less grand couturiers—did that for her, raving over her ash blonde coloring, her tall grace and slenderness. Often three days July days. Faith thought of Mary Allan who had sent her a postcard from Brittany. And Paul Tuckerman—well, there didn't seem to be any place for shabby dreamers in the present scheme of things.

For all Faith saw of Hunter alone during the next week, he was not to be caught in any tempting circumstances where her loveliness might weaken him. Yet he didn't leave Paris, although most of his friends had moved for the season into their villas and chateaux.

He was waiting for someone—for Gertrude Stevens, Faith finally decided, noticing how many letters came for him in the bold dashing hand she was growing to hate. Letters from Southampton, from Newport. When he had read them Hunter grew moody, irritable, and snapped off to his club, or where ever he went evenings. He seemed to think it was enough to surround Faith by a staff of efficient servants with their meals like clockwork. It was all right during the day with all her lessons to attend to and the frequent appointments of Madame de Lane. But in the evenings, she was lonely, hungry for love.

Then one day Madame de Lane said as if she were conferring a diploma. "My dear child, you are really charming."

She and Faith were having tea at Rumpelmayer's, and Faith was feeling rather tired and discouraged because that morning another cable had arrived for Hunter which, this time, she had not read. But it must be from Gertrude.

The Countess leaned across the small table, her brown eyes very bright. "Do not wear your hair like a hayrick, Faith," she said unexpectedly. "It is not for the heart — Her beautifully kept fingers touched the lace of Faith's blouse, "is under the chiffons. Then if the head breaks, there are always chiffons—to cover the hurt. For a moment Madame de Lane looked as if her own chiffons had once done her that service. And Faith remembered that she was getting her from the Count Jean de Lane, for such families, there could be no divorce.

"I can't seem to hide things," Faith murmured. Starting toward the door that led on to the rue de Rivoli. A tall blonde man had just entered Rumpelmayer's. Where had she seen him before?

The woman followed the direction of her gaze. "Ah, the Count de Lane," she exclaimed. "Such a fascinating creature. You know him?"

Faith colored under the older woman's worldly smile. "I've just met him," she said, and looked into her mind of the good-looking Count de Lane who had danced in the shadows of the desk the night Agnes Allan landed at Havre.

De Markoff's gay blue eyes lit upon Madame de Lane, travelled on to Faith, "Ah, what a pleasant surprise—by dear Therese!" He loomed over their table. "You will present me to short military bow.

Madame de Lane held out her hand to be lifted to his lips. "Sit down, Sasha," she said graciously. "You know my friend, Mrs. Hunter Barclay?"

"I have hunted through Paris for this divine Madame Barclay." There was charming reproach in his throaty Russian voice.

"And now you have found me!" Faith said gaily challenged. She was oddly glad to see de Markoff again. It was all so like pre-war days," he smiled back at her.

But Faith was lost in the amusing frothy chatter between the lively Frenchwoman and the gallant Russian. She couldn't keep up with them.

"You must be careful of Sasha," Madame de Lane warned on their way home. "He is very Don Juan. Always running after women."

Faith thought of the haughty lady in crimson who had monopolized him on the host. "I should say he could get the running," she observed.

Madame de Lane gave her bright wise look. "It would not be a bad idea if you would flirt with him a little," she said. "Sasha is an education in himself— and very stimulating to jealousy."

The next day de Markoff called on Faith when she was out. She found Hunter fingering the Russian's card on the small silver tray in the hall.

"How did this get her?" he said with a face of stone expressionless.

"Why I suppose he left it here." Faith's sounded casual, but she was delighted at the interest in Hunter's dark handsome face. It was the first time he had seemed to care who came and went in the apartment.

"I don't like the fellow," Hunter flipped the card back on the tray. "He's a friend of Gertrude Stevens de Lane."

Faith remarked mildly, under fluttering lashes into the living room.

He stood watching her as, slowly she took off her gloves and the little green straw hat. Her grey eyes, under light brown hair piled high and pushed forward over her forehead to the thin pencil arch of her brows, the elegant carmine of her lips in perpetual animation. Her charm was as elusive as an expensive perfume, and her costumes, in their studied simplicity made other women look overdressed.

"Some people I'd like you to meet happen to be in town," Hunter said abruptly, "wild you care to lunch with them tomorrow?"

Little Benny's Note Book

I was tawking to Mr. Riley around at the firehouse and I said, Did you ever have a fire in your own house, Mr. Riley? and he said, once, and it was a peculiar situation. I'd been layed up in bed with a bad cold that I cawt standing up, next one night flames blaze most men get bernt by enter high flames but what happens to me is I get a chill from the draft, and this time I was layed up for quite a spell, he said, and I said, G, did you miss many fires?

That's just the point, I missed what you might call the fire fire, Mr. Riley said. It was just my bad luck that the nerry fire alarm bring the engines clattering and bang bonging ring passed my windows, and my fever went up and up till the doctor got real worried and said there's a case for the coroner unless I got a chance to better my condition by helping to put out a fire myself instead of continuing to aggravate it by listening to other folks' merrily to blazes. Mr. Riley said, and I said, But G, how could you when you was sick in bed?

Then they've hit the nale between the shoulder blades, Mr. Riley said. But all a same, almost by a miracle of coincidence, because a minute ate one nile I was awakened by knocks and I knew I was a silly little fire rite within hand's reatch in my own bedroom in fact. I was in like a flash and by the time the engines arrived I'd already broken in down window panes and emptied a hundred dollers worth of fernishure and caused another hundred damidge with boodle of water, and by that time I was as well and hearty as I ever was, in other words it was just what I needed and it was all down a wounds to arrange it, My wife, Luella, bless her loving hart, had arranged the whole scene with some newspapers and a little gasoline. She'd saved my life and I presented her with a little gold needle in the presents of the entire fire company, and we five got in the picture, Gridden laddies, Mr. Riley said.

Lone Transient Escapes As Fire Damages Jail, In Which He Lighted Stove

Rushes Out to Give Alarm That Deseronto Building is on Fire

POLICE RECORDS SAVED

Too Much Wood Put in Stove by Cold Transient Given as Cause

From an over heated stove in the cell block at the rear of the building, the Town Hall at Deseronto was badly damaged when fire swept the building at 8.00 a.m. yesterday. The fire was discovered by a transient, who was sleeping in a cell at the Deseronto police station, which is at the rear of the Town Hall. The building was badly scorched during the short blaze, but was battled by the local volunteer fire department with an estimated loss of $1,500.00 all covered by insurance, officials stated today.

Fire Starts From Stove

The transient, James Porter, 26 of Windsor, was the sole occupant of the police station on the night of the fire, he having built a fire in the wood stove that is used for heating the Town Council room. Apparently Porter placed too much wood in the stove and it became over-heated. The fire started in the jail, below the office of Chief Constable Charles Smith. Porter was aroused by the stifling fumes and stated he managed to get out of the burning building to give the alarm. The flames soon had a good start, making it difficult to combat by the fire department and burned the east wall of the jail before gaining entrance to the floor of the Chief Constable's office.

The police records were saved by Chief Smith, who, after first completing the jail on the main floor, suffered considerable damage when the flames well took fire and also badly burned. The floor of the chief's office and in the upstairs portion suffered the most damage, it being burned beyond repair.

Police Chief's Narrow Call

The police court records were saved by Chief Smith, who knew that officer rushed into the burning interior while passing around in the smoke-filled room. To saving the police records Chief Smith crashed through the floor, but managed to evade serious injuries when he found his arms out to leave himself from dropping through the ceiling into the jail below.

The Deseronto volunteer fire department put up a stiff battle against the flames, and after a short two hours of fire-fighting had the blaze under control. The only transient who occupied the cell block and was forced to stumble from the fire and smoke to give the alarm, was sleeping when the fire started, but was forced to bring action in search of employment and failing to find the same was returning to Windsor, his home town, and had stopped in Deseronto overnight.

The 68-year old Hickins shuffled slowly to the U. S. President, then answered "no" in reply to the query of Judge Geiger, of whether he had any reason to offer why judgment should not be pronounced.

Previously Judge Geiger denied a motion for a new trial. He also denied a motion for the arrest of judgment. Hickins was granted a five day stay of execution.

CHEESE BOARDS WILL ORGANIZE

Provincial Association May be Formed at Meeting

Representatives from various points throughout the province gathered in this city today to form a provincial association of cheese boards in order more adequately to lay before the Dominion Government plans that they believe will better the cheese industry in this province. A meeting of the Cheese Board of Trade of which W. H. Hepburn is president and Fred Mallory secretary sponsored the meeting and for some time past has met at various points in order that certain resolutions which will be presented at the meeting for consideration and possible adoption.

"On account of the bad condition of the roads, the attendance was not as large as was expected," said Mr. Hepburn but the meeting will be held and a report given to the press at its conclusion. There will be no attempt simply a talk over the situation and how the cheese industry can be improved and in particular attention being paid to the producer. The pattern of the cheese factory in former years has left that field owing to the decrease in the quality of cheese and the ever increasing more remuneration for his product, and this has been partially checked by him, with proper regard to the number of calories, starches, vitamins and proteins. In this manner the prisoner is able to keep himself in the pink of condition, and has his little use for the usual medicines or laxatives so often needed by those closely confined.

Contentions at Trial

The full confidential this agreed with the contentions of the Rear-Admiral and Captain Tower that the collision was the result of negligence on the part of the Revenge's captain, though the latter contended it resulted from a delayed signal and when the collision occurred his vessel was getting under way stemwards after he had ordered engines reversed in order to avoid it.

Capt. Tower's acquittal was ordained before the verdict was read by the fact his sword was placed on the table pointing toward the place when he returned to the room after the court had deliberated privately.

Captain Tower surrendered his sword, following custom, as the hearing opened, and pleaded not guilty.

Vermilyea Pays Close Attention to His Diet

Has Special Meals And is Careful About His Health

PLAYS SOLITAIRE

A well thumbed and dog-eared deck of playing cards used by him during the past many weeks of incarceration at the Hastings County Jail, is still the object treasured possession of Frank W. Vermilyea, quartered in the condemned cell at the jail awaiting the execution date of May 2nd next.

Throughout the long hours of the day Vermilyea whiles away the time playing a continuous game of solitaire on his blankets used for a table.

Still evidencing the philosophical calm and stoical attitude that has marked him since the first day of the trial, the county's chief prisoner is according his close confinement with little outward sign, other than that of temporary annoyance over the little inconvenience that occur during the day. If conveniences were concerned, Vermilyea would chat freely with his guards who closely watch his moves and actions in the cell, however a new light was placed in the corridor of the jail since which he could see in order to illuminate the interior of his place of confinement.

Jailer Lawrence B. French again today spiked rumors that Vermilyea had been "gassing" during the trial reported in the outside press.

"You can say from me that he is just the same as ever. He has given us no trouble and those wild stories that he wrecked part of the jail are absolutely untrue. He couldn't cause trouble even if he wanted to; he is under too close guard to do that."

Even though under close confinement and with his exercise periods limited, Vermilyea always careful in the matter of looking after his personal appearance, continuing in practice. Although he now has the opportunity of ordering special meals, his diet is being carefully checked by him, with proper regard to the number of calories, starches, vitamins and proteins. In this manner the prisoner is able to keep himself in the pink of condition, and has his little use for the usual medicines or laxatives so often needed by those closely confined.

CAPTAIN OF HOOD GIVEN ACQUITTAL

Court Martial Finds Not Guilty of Hazarding Ship

Portsmouth, England, Feb. 28 (CP)—A courtmartial today acquitted Captain P. T. B. Tower, commander of H.M.S. Hood of a charge of having "hazarded" his ship in a manoeuvre last month which resulted in a collision with H.M.S. Renown.

Capt. Tower's trial was the last of three growing out of the collision between the two giant warships. On Tuesday, Rear-Admiral Sidney Bailey, commander of the battle-cruiser Renown, with his flag in the Hood, was acquitted. Yesterday Captain H. R. Sawbridge, commander of the Renown, was convicted, dismissed from his ship, and retired on half-pay.

Contentions at Trial

The full confidential this agreed with the contentions of the Rear-Admiral and Captain Tower that the collision was the result of negligence on the part of the Revenge's captain, though the latter contended it resulted from a delayed signal and when the collision occurred his vessel was getting under way sternwards after he had ordered engines reversed in order to avoid it.

Filings, Powdered Emery Placed in Plane Engine Is Charged by Wiley Post

"Another Pilot" Suggested as to Blame For Overheating

PILOT NOT NAMED

Laboratory Tests Show Filings, Emery, in Oil

Kansas City, Feb. 28. — (AP) Wiley Post charged today tonight two pound of steel filings and powdered emery were placed in the engine of his aeroplane, probably at the instigation of "another pilot," because the failure of his recent projected substratosphere flight across the continent.

Post, here enroute to New York, did not name the pilot, but said he had enough evidence of the alleged sabotage to convince him the foreign matter was placed in the engine of the Winnie Mae deliberately.

Overheating in 50 Minutes

Oklahoman's belief that the substances caused the engine to overheat dangerously after he had been in the air less than 50 minutes, he made a forced landing, with a full load of gasoline and without landing gear, in the bed of Mudon Dry Lake in California.

Laboratory tests disclosed the presence of emery and filing in the oil," Post said, referring to an investigation now underway in Los Angeles.

"I began to suspect something was wrong soon after I got off the ground as I was unable to maintain the engine was hotter than it ever had been before. At first I thought of an oil leak, but I found later the temperature was coming from the other brother pipes due to overheating.

The round-the-world flier grasped daily described the plight.

"There I was," he said, "with hot oil being spewed all over the wind shield of the Winnie, in the special suit I was wearing in order to maintain sea level pressure for my body there is only a narrow slit for me to see out of. I have only one eye to see with at any time.

Flier Praises Ship

"As you know, I had dropped the landing gear of the plane just after I left Los Angeles. In the cabin behind me at the moment were some 2,000 gallons of gasoline in tanks of gasoline. The Winnie was not equipped with floating valves and I was faced with the necessity of landing with the landing gear in about the shock of my specially-loaded machine and almost unable to see where I was going.

"To make things even worse," Post added, "I had no means of determining wind direction. I chose Mudon Dry Lake for the landing because it is as big as the state. When I got near the earth, I found it was in a side wind and was drifting badly but there was nothing else to do, I set down."

Post said he believed the government should investigate the matter.

New Flight Planned

The one-time plow-boy said he hoped the engine of the Winnie would be overhauled in time to permit a new flight to begin within ten days. He said he was convinced his hope of spanning the continent in seven hours was entirely feasible.

Catch Fish With Tail Like Rat

Boston, Feb. 28—(AP)—A strange specimen of tropical fish, caught off Western banks near the coast of Nova Scotia, had the experts and old fishermen at the Boston fish pier puzzled today.

The fish brought in by the Boston trawler Thomas Whalen, was three feet in length, weighed five pounds and was a chocolate brown color. A row of spikes ran along the back in place of a dorsal fin and the body tapered off with a tail resembling that of a rat. The head, resembling that of a shark, had several rows of fine sharp teeth. In the fish had large protruding eyes of a deep sea specimen.

Dr. Henry Fitch, director of the Boston office of the U.S. Bureau of Fisheries, said the only other specimen was reported caught off the coast of South America in 1880.

ANGLERS CHANGE NAME OF SOCIETY

Hunting Section Incorporated With Fred Smith in Charge

In order to incorporate hunting into its realm, local Anglers Association changed its name to Belleville and District Fish and Game Protective Association by the unanimous vote of nearly 130 members at the Y.M.C.A. last evening. Immediately upon the adoption of the new name, Mr. Fred Smith was put in charge of the hunters section of the organization.

Undoubtedly the most important information to be related to the meet last night was the report of Dr. Van Blaskom, chairman of the restocking committee. Dr. Blaskom informed the meeting that the Ontario Government, through the Game and Fisheries Department, had consented to send a biologist to Belleville with instructions to study local and adjacent waters in Hastings County in the matter of restocking local waters with game fish. Dr. Blaskom stated that the department was quite willing to restock with game fish all waters found fit to be provided with game fish, stating the department would naturally await the findings of their biologist before attempting re-stocking programme. This information was received with much enthusiasm by the members. Restocking local waters has been paramount in the minds of all local anglers for some time past.

Resolutions Presented

President J. E. Shortt gave a lengthy outline of the resolutions and recommendations adopted at the annual meeting of the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, special-wide meeting held at Hamilton recently. Many of the resolutions brought out was the rejuvenating of the government to re-zone the province into districts, the lifting of restrictions and laws. The provincial game laws were criticized by the government, that more and adequate protection be afforded the game of Ontario. They also asked, that primary and elementary education relating to conservation of game fish be entered in our public schools. Resolutions were explained.

Thirty New Members

Chairman "Cap" Botham of the membership committee handed in the names of nearly 30 new members, bringing the total members' roster up to over 130. Harold Leslie, membership secretary, read the casting committee, reported that the lake Ontario would be available for club members to start their practice casting next week. Casting nights will be decided by the club members to practise and competitive casting during the next two months. Casting tournaments are already being planned by the club. The yearly membership fee was cut from one dollar to fifty cents for adult members, and one dollar for junior members.

During the meeting an ax real moving picture entitled "The Fish-Hideous Man" was displayed, demonstrated the folly of catching more game fish than are necessary. The picture proved both humorous as well as educational. Excellent closeups of leading fish were clearly shown during the filming.

MAYOR PLEASED AT RELIEF PLEDGE

Hepburn's Offer to Ottawa Praised by Mayor Tice

Well pleased with the results of the conference held in the city of Toronto yesterday, Mayor Geo. O. Tice arrived back in the city late last evening after having spent the past two days in that city during which time his attention was split with four other Ontario mayors composing the executive committee of the Association of Ontario mayors, held a successful interview with Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn.

Premier Hepburn told the delegation that if the Dominion Government would pay 50 per cent of Ontario direct relief costs, his government would pay the other half.

"If this is carried through, Belleville, as well as other municipalities throughout the Province will benefit greatly" said Mayor Tice today in reporting on the result of the conference held with the Premier.

The delegation laid before the Premier resolutions drafted at their two-day conference in London in January. Chief resolution was the matter of relief costs.

Request the government lower the gas limit for pensioners of old age pensions from 70 to 65 years was also made. The Premier promised this would be effected if the Federal Government passed the enabling legislation.

Another resolution had asked a 12-month residence period for relief recipients. The delegation was told this is already in effect.

One other important resolution advanced by Mayor Tice and second by Mayor Mercer, that the government be asked to consider those portions of city streets which make up main highways and bridges thereon as integral parts of the Provincial Highway system, and that the government assume their proper portion of construction and maintenance costs", presented at the conference by the delegation, was given the assurance of consideration by Premier Hepburn. If this resolution is passed Belleville will stand to benefit greatly by the move, it was pointed out.

Composing the executive committee which met the Premier as a delegation were Mayor Tice, Mayor Wenige, London, Mayor J. A. Smith, Kitchener, Mayor Mercer, Peterborough; Mayor R. E. Wilton, Hamilton, Mayor J. A. Kerr, Stratford.

the point of his sword directed at his place—sign of a duel. Subsequently he was dismissed from command of his vessel and is on half-pay.

Rear-Admiral J. A. Troup, navigating expert, was again the prosecutor in the trial of Capt. Tower. A circumstantial letter to the Admiralty was read by the prosecutor in which he stated Capt. Tower appeared to be to blame because during the Renown approaching on a dangerous bearing he did not take action in sufficient time to avert a collision.

The report made by Capt. Tower to Rear-Admiral Bailey after the collision was also entered. In this Capt. Tower said his action in ordering the Hood full speed ahead with the rudder to starboard under the circumstances probably minimized the effects of the collision.

The collision occurred some time after both vessels had been ordered to form in single line ahead. They were doing in until two minutes before the collision the turn-out signal was flown. Rear-Admiral Bailey contended the Renown did not carry out the latter order with speed and precision, though Captain Barbarigo asserted the Renown's engines were reversed and she was barely getting under way immediately before the collision.

Captain Bawtridge, holding temporary command of the old wooden battleship Victory in order he might legally declared if the Hood had followed the "rule of the road" and turned to port when the Renown did the-town, there would have been 100 yards' clearance immediately.

Real-Admiral Bailey was called and testified in his opinion Capt. Tower acted correctly during the commission. In any event his actions greatly minimized the results of the collision and "went within an ace of avoiding it," he said.

Capt. Tower commenced the inquisition to avoid the collision at the right time, although the onus of taking action under the circumstances lay with the Renown, not the Hood, the Rear-Admiral added.

Letters to the Editor

LARUE'S SOLUTION FOR THE CANADIAN RAILWAY PROBLEM

To the Editor, The Ontario Intelligencer.

Belleville, Ontario.

Use the people's railway—ship and travel C.N.R.

If the taxpayers of Canada—the owners of the Canadian National Railways use any other form of transportation than their own railway they think they are wrong. If a farmer leaves his own work, goes over to his neighbours to help him get his crops in under shelter and thereby to pay for his debts and neglects to look after his own work, that would be extremely bad business and we are doing the same things when we ship or travel any way except by the O.N.R.

I have no quarrel with Mr. Beatty for he is working for the shareholders of the C.P.R. and that is what he is getting paid for and he is certainly trying his best to earn his salary. Where I do take issue with him is when he goes up and down the country trying to make us believe that he is working for Canada and the Canadian taxpayers. I fail utterly to see one single thing where he has helped Canada unless it is a benefit to the C.P.R. first.

On the 16th inst. Mr. Beatty said at Halifax that amalgamation had to come. If he had said that amalgamation had to come if the C.P.R. was to continue to operate it would have impressed with him the C.N.R. could get along quite nicely without amalgamation just by his working more under their own interests and patronizing their own roads and thereby let Mr. Beatty do the worrying instead of the taxpayers.

Now, I don't really believe he wants amalgamation for if the scheme that he is at now works. Where won't be any C.N.R. in a short time. His plan now is to hire employees to go out and dig up business and if they are successful in getting enough of it where will the C.N.R. be? Another way if his scheme works he would be in a position to do the dictating and the C.P.R. would be on the defensive.

I know for a fact that my plan is being looked into and discussed on the streets and in public buildings and in places of business and I also know that I am getting results. Mr. Beatty is keeping his plan before the people and I intend to follow him and keep my plan before the people as well. I believe I have the best solution for the railway problem and if anyone can prove to me that my plan will not work or not be to the interests of the tax payers, I will give up and vote before that time.

The time is past when the interest of the many have to be sacrificed for the benefit of the few.

NEW SPIRIT PLEA OF CO-OPERATION URGED ON PARTIES

Bennett Government Has 24 Majority on Unemployment Issue

ISSUE CALLED ECONOMIC

New Liberal Wing in Quebec Calls For Reform

Ottawa, Feb. 26 (CP)—An appeal for a new spirit of co-operation between political parties to establish social justice in Canada was addressed to members of the House of Commons last night as they ended a three-day debate on unemployment with a vote of confidence in the government. Onezime Gagnon, one of Prime Minister R. B. Bennett's chief lieutenants in the Province of Quebec, coupled this plea with a sharp attack on Quebec Liberals generally and a reward of praise for the Independent Liberal group in Quebec headed by Paul Gouin. It was dangerous, he said, to make a social question stand out of a purely economic problem. With the unemployment debate ended the House turns today to consideration of government legislation, including the new farm loan scheme. Hon. Ian Mackenzie (Lib, Vancouver Centre) started debate Monday with a want-of-confidence motion proposed by way of an amendment to the government motion to go into committee of supply. The vote vindicated the government by 93-69. All the Farmer-Labor members except A. M. Carmichael of Kindersley, voted with the Liberals. Mr. Carmichael supported the government because, he said, the motion would have blocked all the reform policies which he wanted to see enacted.

New Liberal Wing

A new wing of the Liberal party in Quebec was calling for reform and was joining with the Conservative Provincial Opposition in fighting the Taschereau government, said Mr. Gagnon. He wanted to know when Hon. Ernest Lapointe (Lib, Quebec East), and other Liberals in parliament stood whether they stood "with Gouin and Lacroix, (Edouard Lacroix, member for Beauce), and against Taschereau or with Taschereau and against Gouin and Lacroix in regard to social legislation."

Mr. Gagnon commented favorably on a recent appeal from Henri Bourassa, Independent member for Labelle, for co-operation in parliament and said he hoped Mr. Bourassa would receive an acclamation at the next election.

Pension at 55 Suggested

Mr. Gladstone Murray (Lib, Cariboo) rose to urge them (the Liberals) to read what he said," went on Mr. Gagnon. "And may I express the hope that Mr. Gladstone Brown will arise on the other side and join with the government in co-operate in bringing social justice and the dawn of a new era of progress."

A proposal that persons over the age of 55 should be pensioned was vanced by William Irvine (U.F.A., Wetaskiwin). This would relieve the jobs for younger people and help eliminate unemployment.

Mr. Irvine said he knew of no subject farther removed from distress and homelessness than the old settlement he promised not to talk about it.

Unsolved Says Irvine

The Bennett Government, said Mr. Irvine had not solved unemployment. In fact it had not been solved by any government without the possible exception of the Soviet. In Canada, unemployment has been getting more acute year by year.

The record of the Liberals was the just as fruitless as the Conservatives and apparently they had no solution to offer today.

The Alberta farmer attacked the proposal made some days ago by Hon. Ian Mackenzie, Vancouver Liberal, to print $430,000,000—which he believed would be scientifically justified having regard to gold—and applying it on the National Debt.

No Care For Bondholders

"I do not give a curse for the bondholders of Canada," exclaimed Mr. Irvine. He was interested in putting money into the pockets of men and women so they could buy goods.

Capitalism could not be made to work, insisted Mr. Irvine, and no Government could patch it sufficiently to solve unemployment. Under capitalism there was only one way to put people to work—create more debt to pay for it.

The advancement of machine production had made leisure possible for the masses but the question was how to enable the masses to obtain goods produced by machines.

Back-to-Land Proclaimed

A back-to-the-land movement was the proposal advanced by John T. Haskett (Oxn. Stanstead). He attributed most unemployment to an excess of population in Canadian cities. Many thousands of people in the cities could support themselves on the land. He deprecated slurs at the manner in which Canadian farmers had to live and suggested people who for months and years had been dependent on public relief in cities should not be too particular when opportunity was offered them of becoming independent.

Donald Pooleis Exonerated In Fatality at Picton

Picton, Feb. 27.—A coroner's jury, under Dr. G. A. Whiteman, exonerated Donald Poole, Picton merchant, native of Winchester, Ontario, from all blame in connection with the death of Fred Eaton, 56, struck by a car driven by Mr. Poole, while walking on the highway, inside the confines of the town of Picton, February 21st, at an inquest. Colin Bird, a Collegiate pupil, 14 years of age, was the only person outside of those in Mr. Poole's car, who saw the car just before the fatal accident. He could not estimate, he said, the rate of speed at which the car was travelling.

Dr. G. Allison testified to the condition of the injured man when admitted to the hospital early Thursday afternoon. Mr. Eaton never regained consciousness, dying at about one o'clock on Friday morning. Death was caused by a fractured skull, while other injuries were a dislocated right shoulder, an injured leg, and a puncture of the air passage.

Murray Eaton, son of the deceased, testified that at the time of the accident, his father was in good health. He were not drinking but while he could not see objects close at hand well, he could identify objects clearly at that were some distance away. His hearing was good for a man of his age, said his son.

Berton McGinnis, garage owner, gave evidence of testing the brakes on February 16 of Mr. Poole's car—a Chevrolet Master Coach, 1934 model—and finding them OK.

Leighton Van Skiver, Dominion Land Surveyor, produced a map showing a survey of the land adjacent to the scene of the accident, that located the position of the body of the injured man, and the tracks left by Mr. Poole's car. It showed that Mr. Poole was travelling easterly on Glenora, while Mr. Eaton was walking westerly towards Picton. The road at the time was aglare with ice.

Donald Poole testified to driving at not more than twenty miles an hour. Just as he broke over the hill in front of Barton Reid's he saw a man over on his left hand side, about 300 or 400 feet away. The man stepped from the shoulder of the road into the centre of the road, saw the car and paused. Mr. Poole recognized the man as Mr. Eaton. He thought Mr. Eaton paused to go back to the shoulder of the road; instead he went on across. Mr. Poole turned out his car as far as possible but could not avoid hitting Mr. Eaton, whose body was hit by the fender, thrown up on the hood, struck a corner of the windshield as was thrown to the ground. Mr. Poole's car went into the ditch to avoid hitting Mr. Eaton and sideswiped a tree there, damaging the car. Mr. Poole rushed to the nearest house and called a doctor to be at the hospital as soon as they could get Mr. Eaton there.

Messrs. Herb Clark, Jack Clark, Percy Harrison, Jr., and William Beasley, passengers in Mr. Poole's car, substantiated Mr. Poole's evidence.

After half an hour's deliberation the jury brought in the following verdict:

"That the Jury sitting on the inquiry into the death of one Fred Eaton, find that said Mr. Eaton came to his death by a collision with a Chevrolet car, driven by one Donald Poole, on the highway inside the confines of the town of Picton, Prinoe Edward, in front of the property occupied by Mr. J. K. Patterson, Thursday, 21st February, 1935. We are of the opinion that Mr. Donald Poole exercised every precaution in the operation of the said car and did everything in his power to prevent the said accident. We therefore exonerate the said Donald Poole from any blame."

The jurymen were: Walter Pope, Jno. A. Maher, John Shannon, W. A. Crawford, Peter Collier, C. H. McGibbon, Em. Ward, Roy Leavitt, Wm. Tait, Chas. Hooper, Jos. Vesterveit and George Jones.

W. Lane represented Mr. Poole while Gordon Walmsley represented the Crown.

ARRESTS FOLLOW $8,000 ROBBERY

Pile of Loot Recovered in Garage And Men Taken

Hamilton, Feb. 26.—Swift police action solved the mystery of the Dominion $8,000 robbery last night when John O'Neil, Mary Street, aged 30, and Joseph Ling, John Street south, aged 22, were lodged in the cells of Sherman Avenue station charged with shopbreaking and theft and theft of a truck. The valuable merchandise stolen from the King St east store between 1 and 4 o'clock yesterday morning was recovered.

Detectives Thompson, Hagan and Gaylard, who were assigned to the case, learned that two young men had rented a garage in the east end of the city and suspected they might know something of the theft. They reported their important clue to Inspector of Detectives J. H. Crocker, who instructed Constable Sam McKee and Friday, Sr., to keep an all-night watch.

At 10 o'clock they saw two young men unlock the garage and slip inside. The officers quickly closed in on them, grabbed the pair and investigated the contents of large cardboard cartons which were piled inside. They found 19 fur coats, 50 dresses, men's shirts, socks and other wearing apparel. A cursory check revealed that the loot was intact. Max Wunder, manager of the store behind the men reported as $8,000. It was not covered by their insurance.

The men did not resist arrest and were not armed. Both are known to police.

SIGNAL SYSTEM BLAMED AT INQUEST

No blame was attached for the accident and the jury found that at the time the automatic signals were operating. Dr. J. G. Seaton of Lynden presided.

WEALTHY BRIDE IS FOUND DEAD

Discovery of Body in Her Car is Being Probed

Pinehurst, N.C., Feb. 26—A coroner's jury is delving into the circumstances surrounding the death of Mrs. H. Bradley Davidson, Jr., 21-year-old heir of E. M. Statler the hotel proprietor but after a secret session recessed until today without announcing a verdict.

Mrs. Davidson, a bride of less than two months, was reported to have been found unconscious in the driver's seat of her automobile in her garage Wednesday morning. She was taken to the hospital where she died a short time later. Dr. M. F. Ross attributed her death to carbon monoxide poisoning.

Richard P. Davidson of Pinehurst, the young bride's brother-in-law, said she was found under the steering wheel of her car in the garage by a house servant. The motor was silent, and the body lay half out of the car. The garage door was closed.

Although the coroner's inquest was secret, it was learned a suicide theory was considered, but the testimony tended to indicate Mrs. Davidson's death was accidental.

THE QUINTUPLETS

Those who have been reading the Dionne babies' story from the day of their birth have of late been interested in discussion of the opposition to the commercialization of the quintuplets. The talk of a sideshow has rather disgusted the public, who have been interested in the family because of the human appeal in the mother and the five babies. The province lent its help towards the household which was burdened with the five's arrival and various branches of organizations took up the case of the quintuplets.

Evidently Ontario is going to take the steps which will make most clear its attitude upon the care of the children. That they will not be allowed to be taken into a barnstorming tour as a sideshow seems very clear. The position which the family faced at the birth of the quintuplets was such that there can not be the least doubt that the government agencies and Dr. Dafoe and the nurses deserve the credit for bringing these five little girls along as far as they have been brought on life's road to-day with the care of the public and government to see that the five little ones have the fullest opportunity to round out their lives.

The money which the government agencies have raised for the children through their efforts will be more than ample for the five girls. They do not need the lionizing which must be made by putting them in a sideshow, if that were contemplated. It can safely be argued that the children will have a better time as wards of the government with plenty of money for their upbringing than they would if they were rushed from place to place in sideshows, being made strange oddities picked up here and there. The government is not going to permit these children to be exhibited as circus freaks brought from many parts of the world.

The parents have been having a turn before the footlights and if they can make contracts of that kind they are at liberty to do so as far as the government or anyone else is concerned. No one would say a word against their right to do so, even if some persons do not agree with the propriety of such an appearance. It is a question of taste. The children in a sideshow surely could not receive the attention they deserved and at their tender age they cannot be too carefully taken care of.

That there might be a great deal of money left for the boys-grow to see the "quints" is recognized, but the public does not like the idea of permitting this especially when there is plenty of money in the fund to take care of them.

The whole question resolves itself into a provincial guardianship over the children of this one birth.

RAILWAYS, TRUCKS, PLANES

Those who have fears that railways may in time be surpassed by airplanes and trucks, should have heard Prof. McDougall of Queen's University, Kingston, on the present situation of the railways, as he spoke at the style of night lecture under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce Greater Citizenship series. He pointed out that freight haulage was the peculiar business of the railways, passenger service contributed but a small share of the railway business, that railways were superlatively important in the long hauls at very cheap figures. The truck's value is mainly in hauls up to one hundred and one hundred and fifty miles.

He showed that airplane service is not as regular as believed, owing to cancellations of trips for weather or other conditions, that the railway is a much more safe means of travel than the airways, that the value of plane travel begins when the trip is for six hundred miles or more, as it cannot compete with the train for short distances.

The professor's attitude favoring co-operation of the railways in Canada as against amalgamation will meet with favor in this railway divisional centre, nearly one-third of whose population is linked up with the railways by employment on the Canadian National Railways.

BASEBALL IN BIRMINGHAM

So many firms of American and Canadian origin have established factories in Birmingham, England, that there is an excellent chance that a baseball league will be formed in the city.

One American firm in Birmingham has been running a baseball team for over a year. The members of the team are mainly their local employees, who have been coached by one of the American directors. This team, however, has had difficulty in securing fixtures within a reasonable distance of the city, and consequently endeavors are being made to secure support for a baseball league.

Altogether there are some twelve firms of American and Canadian origin with factories in Birmingham, and already considerable interest is being shown in the proposed scheme.—Industrial Britain.

MONEY MANIA

There is a poor, unfortunate individual in a New York asylum, who, but for a sudden, unexpected windfall, would be living the life of a free man, sound in mind if not too comfortable in body. The story has been retold many times recently in the press, how this "honest sandwich man" found over forty thousand dollars' worth of bonds in the snow, returned them to their rightful owners, was rewarded with a small pension, and then got the idea he was immensely wealthy, in possession of extra-ordinary powers, finally that he was the Almighty Himself, who gave "Hitler power" by looking at him." His violent insanity is confining him in the madhouse, where he must remain until restored to his right senses. It is a pathetic instance of the devastating effects of prosperity. Isn't it just what the world is suffering from today, on a grand scale?

The world went plugging along until it "struck it rich." Now we have the crazy condition of poverty from over-abundence. Everybody recognizes that it is just a distressing form of insanity, but since the world itself is the patient it is unwilling to admit its pitiful delusions and still more loath to consider that modern civilization has made its own Bedlam, but there are signs, happily, that it will not much longer be content to live in it. Evidences of an improved sanity are multiplying, praise be!—Hamilton Spectator.

A CULTURAL DESIRABILITY

The latest annual report of the National Gallery of Canada makes a recommendation to the Government that has already invited not a little approving comment. It is that the Government provide a new National Gallery building, one substantially larger and much more adequate than the cramped quarters now occupied in the Museum building at Ottawa.

In the quarters now occupied, the National Gallery cannot exhibit to the public a large and valuable collection of pictures relating to Canadian participation in the World War that it has on hand. These, indeed, have never been unpacked, because of the lack of space. They are stored away in the basement of the Museum building, and it is feared that if they are there much longer they will become damaged.

These are, of course, days of financial stress for governments, but it would seem that as soon as finances reasonably be afforded, there should be an appropriation by Parliament for the purpose indicated. We cannot neglect those cultural phases of our national life suggested by practical encouragement of art.—Regina Leader-Post.

THE ACQUIREMENT OF AN EDUCATION

A teacher is reported to have informed her pupils the other day that even after going through the public and high schools and university they are still uneducated. Undoubtedly this was intended to make the children understand that the acquisition of knowledge per se is not education. Something more is necessary, and that additional something is probably best expressed in the words of a writer who defines education as the correlation as the development to their fullest extent of the powers with which each person is naturally endowed.

Obviously such development to the fullest extent of the powers of mind and body can go on for many years after leaving school. In the case of the mind such continued growth can and should go on until long after maturity. Some of the best men and women never relax in the effort to improve themselves, not only in extent of knowledge, but in understanding of the world and the purposes of life.—Calgary Herald.

EDUCATION PROBLEM

But the education question is still very far indeed from being settled. We live in a vastly more complex era than did our forbears. It is incontestable that each generation must have a higher cultivation than the preceding one if efficiency is to be secured. And in each generation the educational code must adjust itself to prevailing social conditions. It is an error and an illusion to suppose that the school pupil or college undergraduate can ever hope to master the entire field of knowledge or the immense variety of subjects that enter into the arena, and clamoring for a lodgment in his mind! This is the modern superstition. It accounts for what is known as the "cram" system. It is based upon the very superstition that education is supposed to attack. Its chief stronghold is the tyranny of custom. It tends to make the mind a lumber-room instead of a cultivated garden; and the stem of knowledge a fabric of dead cells instead of a living root and vital growth. On this point Mr. A. C. Benson justly says: "We shoved and rammed in a good many other subjects into the tightly packed curriculum. The whole thing whizzed and banged, grumbled and hummed like a factory; but very little education was the result." The solution, adds the author, is a very obvious one. It is, at all costs, to simplify and relieve the pressure.—Montreal Gazette.

Discussing the events of the day, home gossip and general news topics as revealed by the home newspaper—under the evening lamp—and Comments Grave and Gay. — Reported by The Lamplighter.

"KEEP BELLEVILLE'S STREETS CLEAN" writes Sidelight Fan, who suggests the following slogans which if acted upon will promote a Brighter and Better Belleville:

KEEP BELLEVILLE'S STREETS CLEAN.

PLEASE DO NOT THROW PAPER ON THE STREET.

PLEASE SWEEP SIDEWALKS DAILY OF SNOW, SAND OR WATER.

PLEASE PLACE ALL GARBAGE IN GARBAGE CANS.

PLEASE SEE THAT YOUR CHIMNEY IS CLEANED AT LEAST ONCE A YEAR.

ASK THE CITY TO SUPPLY WIRE BASKETS TO HOLD WASTE PAPER.

The suggestion is also made that the merchants lead in a campaign to keep the streets clean, by intimating that the merchants are not as careful in this regard themselves as they might be.

As the firemen are called out for many chimney fires Sidelight Fan thinks that there would be fewer fires and less danger of larger conflagrations if citizens had their chimneys cleaned every fall—and see he, the city should insist that this be done.

Concluding Sidelight Fan says: "If we could get all to adopt the above, good habits, it would save much money and keep our streets clean and attractive."

MIRACLES WERE PERFORMED in olden times, the blind recovered their sight, the lame and halt leaped and ran and rejoiced and even the dead came back from that shadow land which is ordinarily a one-way journey. In this wonderful age we are living in there are also miracles, medical miracles, the halt, the lame and the blind recover their faculties and sorrow is displaced with sunshine. In this regard there is no more interesting chapter in all history than the work now being carried on for crippled children in Ontario. The Ontario Society for Crippled Children is now waging a successful campaign to raise at least a quarter of a million dollars for the care and cure of crippled children, of whom there are thousands in Ontario whose parents can not afford the money necessary for treatment, operation and appliances. Service clubs are co-operating with the provincial society in the good work. Belleville Rotary Club has a splendid record in crippled children work. This has been the principal aim of the organization since inception and several hundred crippled children have received specialist medical treatment through the efforts of the Club. No extensive and efficient has the work done in Belleville not only that nation-wide attention and commendation has been the result. At present the crippled children committee of the Belleville Rotary Club has a number of children receiving various kinds of treatment, some of whom have been under treatment for long periods. In more dramatic cases undertaken include a girl of two and a half years with eye trouble. This child was taken to Kingston for specialist diagnosis followed by treatment here in which the defects in vision are being corrected. Another girl of one-year with a crippled limb and a boy of fourteen with both feet crippled are among the most recent cases undertaken by Belleville Rotary Club. Necessarily very little of this work can be given publicity consequently the great work being done is not widely known but those in close touch with it can appreciate the wonder of it. Belleville Rotary Club deserves a lot of credit, and full appreciation must be given the Crippled Children Committee, headed by Charles J. Symons, who has directed the work since inception, and is blessed with an enthusiastic staff of aids who glory in the work and do not stint their time, talent or money in contributing their best to this miracle-working task of taking the bruised and broken bits of humanity just starting out on life's journey woefully handicapped by physical ills through no fault of their own and giving them complete and abounding health and vigour in most cases and better health in all cases—the children—for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven.

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 Years Ago

FEBRUARY 28, 1913

Among Chase flowers it was predicted that the cheese factories will open much earlier this year than for some years past.

At a few minutes after nine o'clock this morning the fire brigade was called to the residence of Mr. Bert Ketcheson, corner of Cedar and Henry Sts. Fortunately the blaze which originated in the kitchen was extinguished before any great damage was done.

Last evening the "Deacons" and the "Printers" who are rivals in every sport from playing marbles to hockey, dropped their rivalry and assembled at the royal Cafe where an enjoyable oyster supper was given by the manager of the house, Mr. B. B. Deacon, and both teams turned out in full force to do justice to Mr. Deacon's generosity. Everyone present enjoyed themselves and the "Printers" and Mr. Deacon very much for his kindness.

Under the auspices of the Boys' Canadian Club in connection with Queen Victoria School, an open meeting was held in the assembly room of the school yesterday afternoon. Master Harold Goggin, presided and filled the position in a most creditable manner. Other numbers on the programme also were heard as careful in this regard themselves as they might be.

As the firemen are called out for many chimney fires Sidelight Fan thinks that there would be fewer fires and less danger of larger conflagrations if citizens had their chimneys cleaned every fall—and see he, the city should insist that this be done.

The maple sugar season has arrived.

House cleaning is the next order of business.

Sugar scales are very numerous in some localities of the country.

The Bell Telephone Company has now reduced rates to $20.00 and $25.00 per annum.

The town council of Trenton has given the Trent bridge a cost of five proof paint which adds to its appearance materially. This bridge was commenced in 1823 and finished in 1854 and as far as our correspondent can learn it had not been painted since the latter date the present time, so it is quite time that it received a coat of paint.

ITALY MAY CALL 8 MILLION MEN

Country Glories in Assurance of Power in Event of Need

Rome, Feb. 28 (AP)—Italy glorified in the assurance that eight million of her countrymen can be rallied to the colors in event of the nation's need.

Premier Mussolini's statement there need be no concern the dispatch of troops to Africa would weaken the country's military strength attracted wide attention in the press.

Meanwhile, the loading of men and supplies for the colonial expeditionary force went forward. Hundreds of tons of war materials were loaded on the decks of the S. S. Arabia at Naples in preparation for its sailing for Eritrea before midnight.

Several other vessels constituting Italy's bridge to East Africa already are enroute, conveying contingents and equipment.

Orders have been given factories, it was announced, for extra arms and munition to replenish military stores.

12 GERMAN BEAUTIES TEND TO CHIC TYPE

London, Feb. 28 (AP)—Twelve of the "most beautiful girls in Germany" have been chosen on "chic" rather than the old "gretchen" type of face today from Berlin with the blessings of the ministry of propaganda.

Their mission is to show Londoners German women are just as modern as the English girls and thereby to disprove the still prevalent idea German women under the Nazi regime have been ordered to revert to the "gretchen" style in which-makeup and "feminine" appeal are banned.

Pictures von Bismarck, wife of the Chancellor of the German Embassy in London (grandson of the "Iron Chancellor") is patron of a two-day fashion parade in a fashionable hotel at which the girls will appear.

Over one hundred friends and neighbors were present and a very pleasant evening was spent. An address was read by Mrs. Frank Hickerson, Mrs. Clifford Smith and Miss Edith Anderson carried a large basket trimmed in pink and white laden with gifts. The basket was filled with a very pretty linen, fancy dishes, glasses utensils, towels and also two beautiful rockers and an end table were given.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson very sincerely thanked their friends for their kindness and invited them to come and see them in their new home. They all joined in singing "For they are a jolly good fellow."

Delicious refreshments were served after which the happy couple received dancing. Mr. Harvey Cook and Mr. Hugh Hannah furnished the music.

The address was as follows:

"Dear Arnott and Lois:

We gives you, your friends and neighbors great gladness to be able to congratulate you on this the auspicious and joyful voyage on the sea of married life. We put many things in your gift will be long, happy and a glorious one, packed with those things which make for a calm of life. We feel, however, that you we do, that is assured.

Should you have grown up among us and been a ever ready friend.

With you, Lois, our acquaintance has not been so long standing, but being the duration we have come to value your friendship and acquaintance.

If you both we wish you the very best that life can afford. We are very glad you are making your home among us and these gifts in the form to remain to remind you of the pleasant evening we have spent together.

We trust your future
Will always be bright;
Your pathway be joyous,
And troubles be light.
Yet God hath not promised
Skies always blue,
Flower-strewn pathways
All our life through.
Now, if shadows should come
And with whistle and sting,
It will make the clouds vanish
And much happiness bring.
Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbors.

YOUTH REPORTED LOST, WIRES HOME

Had Been Travelling Across Northern Canada For Two Years

Churchill, Man., Feb. 28.—(CP)—Misfortune today had overtaken David Irwin, happy-go-lucky world traveller, in his latest jaunt with the Northland. Word from ice-locked Baker Lake, 400 miles north of this Hudson Bay port in the Northwest Territories, said Irwin was ill.

From Grand Rapids, Mich., came news W. T. Irwin, David's father, had started northward after receiving a message saying:

"Sorry to have made you all this worry. Went through rotten ice. Haven't seen human being in six months. Have lived on frozen fish. Heading south."

Financing his travels through use of his motion picture camera and his violin, Irwin had previously made four trips to Alaska, four to Europe and once around the world. His present journey through the frozen Arctic started two years ago when he left the borders led by Andy Bahr guiding reindeer to Canadian Eskimos under contract with the Canadian Government.

Starts From Aklavik

Irwin left Bahr at Aklavik on the shores of the Arctic ocean, and started his solo journey to anywhere in the northland. He travelled down the Mackenzie River 500 miles into the Great Bear Lake Mining area. He was in the Great Bear area in April of last year.

Traveling northward and eastward again, Irwin went alone to Peterson's Bay, King William Island, 700 miles from the Great Bear area and 700 miles north of here. Misfortune began to overtake him as he journeyed south from King William Island in the Arctic ocean.

Called at R.C.M.P. Posts

Irwin called at posts of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on his travels. Two months homeward-lay open to him, from Baker Lake, One was to head eastward from Baker Lake to Chesterfield Inlet, on Hudson Bay, and await a steamer. The other was to keep going south until he came to Churchill. Travelling either route, his break from the north virtually was barred until Spring.

Father Hurries North

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 28.—(AP)— W. T. Irwin of Grand Rapids was on his way to the Northwest Territory of Canada today, hoping to meet his 23-year-old son, David, who telegraphed yesterday a story of adventure and hardship in the sparsely inhabited district of Keewatin.

Irwin started his trip yesterday after revealing a telegram from the youth briefly recounting the hardship that had overtaken him near the end of a three-year journey through Alaska and the island-dotted waters around the Hudson Bay region.

Irwin and his wife said the telegram, delayed in transmission, had come from Baker Lake in the Northwest Territory and was the first communication they had received from him in more than six months.

The Message Sent

Sarcoxie, Mo., Feb. 28.—(AP)—year-old explorer in the Arctic, received by a relative here, says he has excellent motion pictures.

Irwin who formerly lived here sent the message to his uncle, Gilbert H. Wild.

The message reads:

"Left King William Land July. Then went through rotten ice. Never saw human six months. Few fish trapped in shallow water. Made Goal Haven where ammunition, pictures primitive Eskimos. Life tough. Straight frozen fish. No fire, no houses. Dark, learned to appreciate tea, bread and sun. Wire my Eskimo trade—near spring. Around Christmas. Lived with them since.

. . . we travelled alone over 2,000 miles. Was in the vicinity of magnetic pole. . . . Excellent moving Wintered. . . . No fire. No Grub. . . . Three hundred miles west reached white man. Eskimo came to trade. We travelled inland, found an Eskimo trade—near spring. Money is unknown. Dave."

Ottawa, Feb. 28.—A decrease of one per cent. was shown in births registered in 69 cities and towns with a population of 10,000 and over in January when they numbered 6,975, compared with 6,648 in January, 1934, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported today. Deaths numbered 4,228 an increase of two per cent against 4,142 and marriages showed a decrease of four per cent. with 1,202 in comparison with 1,986 in the same month last year.

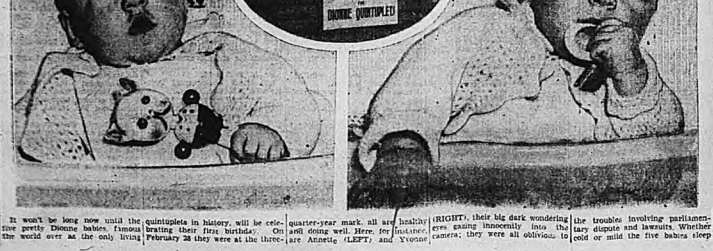
Experiment in Teacher Training Is Being Tried at Normal School

Students Are Being Sent Out to Spend One Week in Rural Schools

With the approval and co-operation of the Department of Education, Peterborough, Normal School is undertaking this year an experiment in the training of teachers which it is hoped will result in greater efficiency and raise the standard for the class that is now in the school.

The majority of Normal School students do their final training in the country, though the greater part of their practice work is done in graded city schools. They have little opportunity to acquaint themselves with conditions that prevail in ungraded classrooms, and find it very difficult to adapt themselves to them. To fit them more adequately to solve the problems they will encounter they are now sent out this year to spend a week each in a rural school, where they will assist the regular teacher and get first hand knowledge of what they may expect when they enter schools of their own.

Care In Selecting Schools



As the value to the student will depend largely upon the teachers with whom they are placed, the greatest care is being exercised to get the best in each locality. Only those teachers whose qualifications and experience are satisfactory to the Normal School and whose success is attested by their inspector will be considered. They will have to get the approval of their School Boards and be willing to do the utmost of make the student's visit to their school well worth while. And these teachers no remuneration is offered except the satisfaction of helping to improve the skill and professional equipment of the beginner, and the distinction which comes from being selected for this important task.

Inspectors with whom the plan has been discussed, and who are in the best position to know the short-comings of newly-trained teachers are enthusiastic in regard to its possibilities.

Enterprising teachers who have learned in some way of what is intended are offering their co-operation and asking to have student assigned to them. They believe that the arrangement will be mutually advantageous, and that for the benefit of their experience which they share with the visiting student they will receive inspiration and the benefit of new ideas which have been developed since their days of training.

The members of the Normal School staff will send the week in visiting schools in which their students are at work. This renewal of contact with rural classes, and the opportunity it will give them of studying or revising their methods should prove to be one of the most valuable features of the plan.

Happy and Healthy, the Dionne Quintuplets Pass the Three-Quarter Year Mark Under Care of Dr. Dafoe

It won't be long now until the five pretty Dionne babies, famous the world over as the only living quintuplets in history, will be celebrating their first birthday. On February 28 they were at the three-quarter-year mark, all are healthy and doing well. Here, for instance, are Annette (LEFT) and Yvonne (RIGHT), their big dark wondering eyes gazing innocently into the camera; they were all oblivious to the troubles involving parliamentary debate and lawsuits. Whether cold or mild the five babies sleep each day outside in their five identical carriages, shown (CENTRE) and watching over them like a guardian angel is that famed country physician, Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe (seen EXTREME RIGHT) peeping in at one of his tiny patients.

They're Perfect Cast

The triumvirate of Crawford-Gable-Montgomery is perfectly cast in the new comedy which has been adapted from the stage hit of the same name without loss of a single bright line of dialogue.

The locale is socialite Park Avenue, which has given the art directors an opportunity to create scenes of the most beautiful settings ever seen on the motion picture screen. These settings seem likely to have the same effect on interior decorating that the picture "When Ladies Meet" had several years ago.

As a light comedienne, left standing at the altar one minute and pursued by two handsome men the next, Joan Crawford is at her best. This is the first time Joan has attempted pure comedy and she turns in a brilliant job.

Gable and Montgomery are both well known as masters of motion picture comedy and they vie to outdo one another with many hilarious situations of the story.

The supporting cast is excellent throughout. Billie Burke appears as a flibberty jilberty society matron, looking as beautiful as ever, Charles Butterworth is at his most awkward best as Gable's friend, virtually his shadow, Frances Drake gives an excellent of those dark-haired siren interpretations that she is a single year she has made famous.

Speed in Direction

Apparently an all-star cast has no awe for W. S. VanDyke, who directed the new picture with all the speed and verve of such of his recent hits as "Manhattan Melodrama" and "Evelyn Prentice."

Shorts Exceptional

An exceptional array of short items precede the exhibition of the feature offering including Thelma Todd and Patsy Kelly in the comedy skit, "Bum Voyage", Bob Crosby, brother of Bing Crosby and a host of entertainers in a musical skit and full revue "Rhythm on the Roof", and a delightful cartoon "Retreat of the Buffalo". The entire program will be repeated again tonight and Friday matinee and evening and is heartily recommended to all lovers of swift-moving entertainment. The feature offering "Forsaking all Others" will commence at 1.10, 3.40, 7.40 and 9.50 p.m. Performances start daily at 2.30, 7.10 and 9.10.

WAR RESOLUTION IS WITHDRAWN

cent of the people of Canada would vote for it, he believed. Senator H. S. Beland (Lib. Beauce) said that citizens in Canada should receive the same remuneration during war but he considered a war council with Dominion and Provincial membership was unnecessary because supervision of war activities in Canada was a federal government responsibility.

Objection to Conscription

Senator John Lewis (Lib.-Toronto) recorded his objection to conscription for the purpose of sending troops overseas and was opposed to minority resolutions. The whole burden should be placed on wealth and a lighter burden on flesh and blood in war time, he said.

Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen was opposed to everything in the resolution "except its aspirations." The principles which he never would be to act upon were "vain and valueless", he said. General W. A. Griesbach (Cons., Edmonton) believed Canada should emulate steps taken 10 years ago by United States which set up a committee to make industrial economic plans. This would avoid "loss of life and wastage of money and property," he stated.

Useful Purpose Served

With the comment his resolution had served a "useful purpose," Senator Hughes withdrew it. The resolution proposed, if Canada again entered war, (A) "consecrated" all wealth and property (B) establishment of a war council representing Dominion and Provincial governments, (C) power to the war council to assign men and women to their "best qualified" occupations, (D) all persons in Canada "from the Governor General down" to receive equal remuneration during war; (E) no war loans in the form of war to be raised by taxation and capital levy as the country duly would not show an increase at the end of hostilities.

Senator Hughes stated that his resolution had received a great deal of support which he appreciated.

"There is no one in this House," said Senator Meighen, "more eager and more ready to sacrifice and to make improvements in his country than I am. I do not know whether it can be done yet. I do not know whether there is a war coming and I certainly do not know that there is not one coming. The events of the last three years have been startling. Also do not know of anyone who is more certain to lose by war than we are but I confess that if we have any brains and have the means to defend our country we ought to do so, but we must not yield to the fatuity that we can be alone in the world."

Meighen's View

"So far as the resolution calls upon us to concentrate upon victory, I am in favor of it; but when it acts out in detail I do not believe to reach this goal, I say they will be the most unfortunate of the Hon. member seeks to act upon any such resolution and never will be followed in this country or in any other.

"The proposal there should be no war debts at the end of hostilities is a consummation devoutly to be wished, but if it were attainable why had not intelligent countries of the world, not only this present event, said the Senate leader. The reason was that had to be "spread" he stated.

Mr. Goodison said the effect of the MacKenzie motion would be to make it impossible to vote any money for war purposes. Perhaps $100,000 a day was being spent throughout Canada on unemployment relief.

How West Saved

"We from the financial capitalist provinces of the East," he said, have saved the provinces of the West from bankruptcy and we have got one word of thanks for it."

Conscription was not a dead issue in Quebec, the member went on. In 1931 Hon. Fernand Rinfret then said Prime Minister R. B. Bennett was opposed to conscription. Mr. Rinfret denied using any such words but Mr. Gagnon went on to say a lot would be heard about conscription and constitutional issues in the next election which would set out to keep the government supporters from Quebec.

The Liberal government in Quebec had appointed a Commission which made an extensive study of Federal Financial Relations. The Commission had recommended adoption of old age pensions and co-operation with the Federal government to effect unemployment insurance. Not only that but Quebec government failed to take any step to give effect to the report when the Liberals came back with even races and between provinces.

Mr. Duplessis declared he would be removed to the farms and away from industrial centres. He opposed a Dominion Land Settlement Commission to make a survey in conjunction with the provincial and municipalities "to get the good land from the bad and then allot without cost to people agriculturally inclined." Financial assistance could be extended for three or five years.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES

Toronto, Feb. 26—The Industrial list displayed confidence by holding prices at a steady to strong level on the Toronto Exchange today. The Metals, Nickel and Smelters have strong leadership, while the rest of the oils and liquors were not inclined to step out. Pure A sold a little lower.

Brazilian was sold quite actively on a small price decline, Banks and Financials were steady while Utilities and Steels lost a little ground.

MINING MARKET

Toronto, Feb. 26.—Recent advances in the price of gold in London finally impressed the market for gold shares on the Toronto Exchange today and higher prices ruled. Hollinger, Wright-Hargreaves and Tek Hughes along with the other producers worked into higher ground. Dome led the rally with a morning gain of $2 per share, up another $3 later.

Under considerable selling pressure Lake Shore held to 1.56 for a loss of 13 cents. Traders appeared to have expected more from the 1 year's clean up, official forecast, published today, estimated.

Base Metal and silver shares showed some strength but trade in the groups was slow.

NEW YORK EXCHANGE

New York, Feb. 26—(AP)—Closing the doors on February today finds speculation pretty well pruned to comfort March with a fair amount of brv's, fulness and courage.

Among shares of Canadian Companies, McIntyre and Canadian Pacific were slightly lower, while Dome and International Nickel advanced a little. Hudson Bay, Steel of Canada and Hiram Walker maintained a steady tone. Dominion govern bonds showed slight changes. Canadian funds eased 3-32 of a cent at 99.87 1-4 cents.

Gold-Rush Town Serious-Minded

(By Leslie Roberts)

Jellicoe, Ont., Feb. 26 (CP) —The boom-town of the summer's gold-rushing Jellicoe has established itself as a serious community which hopes to become rich from its neighboring mines and prepares for an inevitable future. It isn't the Jellicoe of five months ago.

Then it was the focal point of prospectors and mining syndicate men from all over Canada. Last summer it was a camp with not enough beds to o around, insufficient eating accommodation, no theatres, no hospitals, no bank and church. There was one store and a tremendous amount of excitement.

Preparing for the second summer season, Jellicoe has six hotels and the same number of restaurants, a Red Cross hospital cat up a broker board room.

The new era even includes a drama group which will present its play in the school house next Saturday. These are the things that happen when a gold rush subsides and the rushers turn to mine-making.

Y.P.S. EXECUTIVE IS ENTERTAINED

Mr. Taylor Franklin of Albert College was guest speaker at supper of Bridge Street Young People's Society on Wednesday evening at the Albert College. After spending a pleasant evening a delicious oyster supper was served in the dining room.

KING ST. CHURCH CLUB BANQUETS

The annual banquet on ladies' night, held by the Men's Club of King St. Church was held last night with a large attendance. President Walter Cainforth was in the chair. The toast to the King was responded to with all singing the National Anthem. W. J. Potts proposed a toast to the Church which was ably responded to by the pastor, Rev. A. E. Jamieson. A fine program was also presented. Mrs. A. Cuff and Mrs. Bishop rendered an instrumental duet, and Master Wesley Weese sang. Tuesday delighted the audience with humorous selections. Mr. E. L. ELLIOTT—SMART

A pretty wedding took place in Toronto last Saturday at half past two o'clock in the afternoon in the Church of St. Aidan, of Annis, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Smart, of Toronto, to Thomas Elliott of the Royal Canadian Air Force, second eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Elliott, Highland Park, Ottawa. Rev. T. H. Cotton officiated and Mr. J. Chalmers presided at the organ. Palms, pink and white chrysanthemums and pink snap dragons decorated the church.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a graceful gown of ivory satin crepe on princess lines with train. Her small hat was of the same material with shoulder veil and she carried an arm bouquet of Johanna Hill roses and lily-of-the-valley.

Mrs. Gordon Grimshaw, matron of honor, was in turquoise blue satin crepe with golden brown velvet trimming, brown shoes, hat and veil. She carried a muff of same material as her gown, with a spray of violets and Talisman rosebuds. Miss Dorothy Elliott, sister of the groom, and Miss Muriel Garrett, bridesmaids, were gowned alike in mustard colored crepe with touches of brown velvet, matching accessories and they also carried matching muffs with sprays of the violets and Talisman rosebuds.

Mr. Ernest C. Elliott of Cumberland, Ont., was his brother's groomsman and the ushers were Mr. Hubert Smart and Mr. Gordon Grimshaw. During the signing of the register Mr. Lewis Rawlinson, cousin of the bride sang "Until."

A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, following the service, when the guests were received by Mrs. Smart and Mrs. Elliott. The youngest guest at the wedding was Master Thomas Hunter Smart, eight-month old son of

N.H.L. BATTLE TIGHTENS FOR LAST DASH

Race in The American Section Narrows Down

With the National League's American Division race as close as it is the jump from third place is but a hop that some teams have made in one night's pockshaking.

Cess Loughlin and his Chicago Black Hawks hope to accomplish it tonight and last the section, making the present first place tie trickery New York Rangers and Boston Bruins a scrap for second place.

The stage for the Chicago bid is set in Detroit where the Cubbies meet Red Wings who are voted out on hpeleyoff bunBrut of the playoffs but have an annoying habit of taking points from other teams who really need them.

Montreal Maroons must do their part too, if the Hawk ahead of them need.

Maroons are assigned them in the Loughlin plan is a defeat of Rangers in New York. The Chicago Manager figures it shouldn't be so hard as Manager Shaughnessy has in hired hands as they contact in Montreal Tuesday by a St. Louis.

Boston will have anything to say about the change, if it takes place, if they are like Coach Art Louis Eagle play Canadiens at Montreal in the evening's final game with principal interest attaching to the Habitantmen's bid for better their first round lead over New York Americans.

Of course Rangers may upset the plan by defeating Maroons in their last engagement of the schedule on That would put them two points up on Boston and, if Chicago lose, threw up on the Hawks.

Maroons definitely will be trying hard for their still hot chance to make for the International Division top spot. A win would leave them only six points below Toronto Maple Leafs.

TORONTOS DOWN OAKVILLE 2 TO 0

Queen City Pucksters Seem Headed For Senior "A" Finals

Toronto, Feb. 28—(CP)—It began to look today as if the Grids who pitched Oakland Tigers and Toronto All-Stars to meet in Senior "A" Canadian Hockey Association final knew what they were talking about.

Torontos took a 2-0 victory from Oakville Villans here last night and looked far superior on the night's play. It was the first of their two-game total-goal series and Torontos to will carry their two goal lead into their second game next Friday. The winners will meet either Hamilton or Port Colborne for the championship of the O.H.A. and the right to advance into the provincial and Dominion playdowns. The Tigers are enjoying a three-goal lead garnered in Port Colborne today.

The game last night was devoid of thrills except for a speedy first period which saw the All-Stars ram in two goals, one by "Shorty" Robinson on a pass from Gareny Large and the other by Kenny Godall, and then relax while the Villans tried in vain to pierce a five-man defence which used the puck past curly-headed Andy Goldie in the winners' nets.

B. C. I. Pucksters Win 5-1 Over Madoc Interscholastic Team in Exhibition Game

Locals Carry Too Much Speed and Experience Around Net

The Belleville Collegiate Institute hockey sextets handed the Madoc High School juniors a 5 to 1 reverse at the local Arena last evening in an exhibition interscholastic hockey match. The local B.C.I. squad showed a slightly better allaround on the offence, especially around the nets, and when in scoring position. The forward lines—centre and wingmen moved into a commanding position. In the initial frame when they scored three. A goal by Johnston in the middle frame elevated the score to 2 to 0 for Belleville while the bonesters bagged two, to Madoc's lone goal in the last twenty minutes. The game was a typical exhibition affair and played clean throughout.

Both teams opened purely on the offensive and gave plenty evidence of evidence as the defence and goaltenders of both teams carried the play, especially when it was to their vantage. "Mits" Martin, in the Madoc nets, made many spectacular saves in the first ten minutes to keep the local forwards off the scoring sheet. McCreary raced down the right boards to carry the puck in on a solo effort and count the scoring. Isle in the first period. Johnston, Bud Johnston's brother, gave the Madoc goal to flash the red light and put B.C.I. in the lead 2 to 0 and ended. "Bud" Johnson's solo rush, to score in the first minute of play of the second period was the only sign of scoring in the entire twenty minutes. Although both teams worked hard to bulge the heavy. Finnegan scored on a pretty rush in the last frame only to have Walt Ross carry the rubber the length of the ice and beat Goalie Pat Robinson for the visitor's only tally. Sharpe, B.C.I. net-minder had to be at his best to stall "college-fans" in preparation for their coming O.H.A. playdowns.

Martin turned in a marvelous effort for the Madoc boys in the nets while Kincaid and Hill set up a powerful defence. The Madoc front line of Parks, Ross and Wellman carried plenty of speed despite the fact that they were considerably outweighed by the locals. Short-handed in the locals playing only two men, Reeves and Munro turned in stellar games as relief men. Bud Johnston left the ice with a broken leg as followed by McCreary, Finnegan, Hastings and Mohr. O'Dell and Logie looked the best of the defence men used by Coach Chisholm. Both Reeves and Sharpe tended to the net-minding.

The line-ups—B.C.I. & V.S.

30 Minutes Overtime Leaves Teams Locked

Barrie, Ont., Feb. 28.—(CP)—Two overtime periods failed to settle the O.H.A. Intermediate "A" play-off series last night between the Gravenhurst Indians and Toronto Royal Canadians. Each team tallied in a hard-fought deadlocked on the round 5-5. The teams battled for a 6-6 tie in the first game. They will meet here again Friday night.

WRESTLER SPLITS REFEREE'S PANTS

Hectic Bout Sees Grappler Show Official's "Undies"

Windsor, Ont., Feb. 28—(CP)—It has been reported before how wrestling referees have been forced to pound unruly grapplers into submission when all other means had failed but the show was on the other foot during a bout here recently.

Referee Joe Lanzer was having quite a bit of trouble making "Red" Sims, Hamilton, Ont., roughouse artist, be good when during the latter's bout with Pat McCarthy, Montreal, Lanzer seized on one occasion gave the red head a shove while attempting to break an illegal hold.

Sims, caught unawares, staggered towards the ropes and in reaching for something to maintain his balance grabbed the official's trousers and split them in two, leaving away the front half and leaving the owner standing in full view of a puzzled house, displaying a suit of white flannel underwear, ankle length.

McCarthy eventually won the bout.

TECS' ADVANCE TO SECOND RUNG

London Downs Windsor And Takes Commanding Position

Windsor Bulldogs, cellar occupants of the International Hockey League for some time, saw their hopes of a playoff berth virtually shattered when they lost a hard 3-2 decision to London Tecumseh.

London moved into a second place tie with Buffalo Bisons for the last night, drawing away from Cleveland Falcons who lost a 5-4 decision to Syracuse Parkys. Jack Markle's goal in overtime gave Starr the victory.

Pri's London has a chance to lead t. group with Detroit by getting a win over Cleveland Falcons for the Stars would mean a tie for third place with Cleveland.

The one consolation Falcons could draw from last night's game was that their record of no tie games remained unstreaked. And, it was while they were playing a tie in the overtime period that Markle scored the game winning counter. Dave Downie and Bill Gill provided the assists.

Two thousand fans saw Windsor lose to London. Harvey Rockburn put Windsor ahead early in the first period. There was no score in the second frame and then George Brown, Jr. Bentley and Kennedy Cook tallied for Tecs in the third before Aubrey Watson scored scoring with Windsor's second goal.

"Y" JOTTINGS

The stars managed by Instructor Ralph Morden, who was in charge of the evening's activities, that terminated in refreshments being served the club members after the tournament.

The "Y" swimming club will meet periodically in informal meets in preparation for larger inter-city swimming meets that will be staged throughout Eastern Ontario and will be presented to the public later in the season.

The "Y" intermediate B.O.B.A. basketball team will journey to Peterboro to appear in Kingston tonight versus the Kingston "Y" team. The locals are the division their standing to second position in the group by taking the Kingstonians into camp. With a last minute rally the Limestone City cagers eked out a one point victory over the Morden-coached clan here some weeks ago and the locals are out for revenge tonight. A number of the "Y" team are journeying to Kingston. Bowler, thus mitigating their chances of keeping up in the group race.

VERBAL DEBATES HEARD AS PLAYERS NAME ALL-STARS

Chapman and Smith of "America" in Argument

(By George Maguire)

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—(CP) — Art Chapman, New York American centre, who ranks with the top flight of playing pivots of the National Hockey League, has always been considered an exceptionally handy player both on and off the ice.

He that as it may Chapman pulled a faux pas the other day he will probably never forget. The clever play-maker upon himself the terrific responsibility of picking the All-Star team.

As a goaler he thought "Tiny" Thompson of Boston was "A standout on any club" and can you blame him but Eddie Shore and Earl Seibert of New York Rangers for defence men, Lionel Conacher, Montreal Maroons, Johnny Sorrell, New York Rangers for centre and Bill Cowley of Boston and Paul Dit Clapper of the Bruins on right wing.

Up to that point Mister Chapman got along very well, but when he picked Lorne Chabot of Toronto Leafs for the the left wing berth, he piled head first into a tornado.

The storm was launched by Alex Smith, former defenceman and former Ottawa star who is one of those immortals "Babe" Ruth. Smith protested Aurel Joliat, little Montreal Canadien left wingman was unquestionably the tops for the portside job. He delivered a brilliant talk in favour of the merits of his argument.

Chapman gave not an inch of ground and even blase hockey writers were interested in the arguments themselves joined in the debate.

The verbal storm would no doubt still be raging had not Dutch Gallery Amerk defenceman, suggested Smith pick an All-Star aggregation for the benefit of those present. Smith fell for the idea and in explaining as was Chapman's except ing Joliat held the left wing spot and nothing more was said Smith from that selection.

The good humoured joust proved one thing at least Joliat still has many supporters in Gotham despite the rising power of the younger element.

In the first period there was one goal scored by each side. Good checking the twine for Oshawa after Price had rapped in the opening counter for the home team. Throughout the second session the locals notched two by Sherriff and Ellis, assisted with Maundrell scoring near the finish of the period for Cheerios. Both teams, anxious to score all the goals possible, battled hard throughout the third session, with Ellis finishing, the scores being Price and Cochrane for Oshawa.

'Babe' Ruth Has Managerial Aspirations, Expects to Head Boston Braves Next Season

Will Succeed McKechnie as Manager in 1936

HIS LIFE'S AMBITION

McKechnie to be Given Executive Post Next Year

New York, Feb. 28—Babe Ruth paused long enough yesterday in the midst of preparations to assemble the triple crown of office under the banner of Boston Braves—to confirm the general expectation that his self-announced managership of the club by 1936, if not sooner.

For the time being the Babe will enjoy the novelty of coaching the incoming recruits as a player with the nominal jobs of assistant manager and second vice-president of the Braves. He has pledged and will give full allegiance to McKechnie, but will have absolute authority in running the team this year, but there is also a tremendous understanding about the future.

"It's been definitely decided that I will take full charge of the Braves on the field next year," said the Babe, "and my ambition still is to manage a big league club, and I am going to make good on the bench-standing it will be fulfilled. I'll have three years at least, with the pact Eddie Shore and Earl Seibert of New York Rangers for defence men, Lionel Conacher, Montreal Maroons, Johnny Sorrell, New York Rangers for centre and Bill Cowley of Boston and Paul Dit Clapper of the Bruins on right wing.

Up to that point Mister Chapman got along very well, but when he picked Lorne Chabot of Toronto Leafs for the the left wing berth, he piled head first into a tornado.

The verbal storm would no doubt still be raging had not Red Dutton, fiery Amerk defenceman, suggested Smith pick an All-Star aggregation for the benefit of those present. Smith fell for the idea and in explaining as was Chapman's except ing Joliat held the left wing spot and nothing more was said Smith from that selection.

The good humoured joust proved one thing at least Joliat still has many supporters in Gotham despite the rising power of the younger element.

BENEDICTS VICTORS

Trenton, Feb. 28 (Special)—The largest crowd in the past two years filled the Trenton arena last night when another hotly-contested game staged in the Trenton and District Hockey League with the Benedicts defeating the Cottons and Wooler and Brighton who were tied for first place. The game was the finale of the schedule and resulted in a 6-0 win for Wooler. The Benedicts now defeated Agra Co-Operative Workers to place themselves in the first place in the O.H.A. High School. The last game between the Trent Cottons and Benedicts ended in a 2-2 draw for the latter. Just four more games are to be played to complete the schedule of fifty-five games, the play-offs will be arranged the first of next week and it now looks like a battle between Wooler, Brighton, Trenton and Benedicts unless there is a fifth team named being the team we think is the one to take the honors from the four.

Fast and Clean Game

Benedict 4—Workers 2

The Co-Operative Workers, who have not won a game to date, gave the Benedict-Proctor a full hour's hockey before they were defeated. The silver-platers scored two in the opener, Maitts scored the first with a nice shot into the corner. The B. P. had the most of the play but could not put the puck across the count. Bill Miller shot from outside the blue line to score a soft tally before the period closed. Fred Attz worked his way through the Silver-platers defence to count for Workers in the second. He again went through the defence but was stopped by Cottrell in the net who was playing a sterling game between the posts. Workers were down in the last frame and it looked like they meant business. Cottrell worked hard, off before his team settled down. The Workers were without Rosenzip, their king pin, or the game may have ended differently. Labelle and Miller scored counters for Cottrell came out to smother his rebound and Miller lifted the puck under the bar. Maitts and Miller saved the game when they each tallied before the period ended.

Miller, Maitts, Blakely and Vanderwoort starred for Benedicts on the forward line for the winners with Cottrell in the net outstanding. Labelle, Wade and Curry were the pick of the losers.

Referee—Bill Bowen.

Tommy Amera Suffers Injuries at Harbour Stables

Carrying Place—Hopes for a playoff berth in the semi-finals of the Trenton and District Hockey League began to fade for the locals when on Friday evening last at Trenton Arena they dropped an unfortunate game to Wellington Cottons by a 5-3 score. The locals were minus the services of their star defence man, Ted Johnson, but that is not quite an alibi as they led three to one during the early part of the third period. The Cottons, seeing their chances more remote each minute, launched a desperate five-man offensive that netted them two pretty goals, the last with bare seconds left to play. In the overtime period, inspired by their success they tallied two more leaving the locals downcast, by virtue of their win Cottons climbed into a tie with Carrying Place for fourth place, but as the locals have yet their two (probably) toughest games to play, against Brighton, league leaders, and the rapidly-improving Frankford Procter senior, it may be supposed that Cottons have a better chance of finishing that berth than our own aggregation. It was, as has been said many a time before about a meeting of these two teams, a game in a mighty nice game to win and a tough one to lose. In the absence of Johnson, Vic Willis turned in a marvellous defending game and was the individual star of both teams.

While he was attempting to ride a mettlesome colt near the Harbour Stables last Thursday morning, Trainer Tommy Amera was thrown violently to the frozen ground when the animal reared unexpectedly and sustained a severely strained back. The accident occurred 100 yards south of the stables on the Gwendenvia road where during the present winter many of the horses have been exercised. The colts has been entire for some time and Trainer Amera had decided to "break it for a harness" during the snowy road. Attended by Dr. J. Farley of Trenton, the injured man was ordered to take a few weeks of rest, after which he may expect to be quite fit again. Mr. Amera has gone to Toronto since, to be with his mother who has been quite well recently, and recuperate from his own injury.

The old Young home, located near the shore of Weller's Bay where it was built in 1856, and probably the most famous historically of any residence for miles around, narrowly escaped destruction by fire at midday last Thursday when the home of Mr. H. Young, extinguished flames near a fireplace where he had detected them. During the noon hour Mr. Young seemed to hear a roaring sound as of a forest, speeding his engine, and after investigation found that the chimney above an ancient fireplace was burning out. The fire-board around it in one place became hot, however, and the flames broke out near several articles of furniture, which, left alone, would have blazed up only too rapidly. Carrying Place could ill afford to lose this historic landmark any more than could its owner; and those who go annually to Wonder Cove Beach and see in passing the huge old grey house set proudly back among its trees, will be glad that it did not burn. Mr. R. H. Young, the owner, is a direct descendent of Captain Robert Young, the friend of Governor Simcoe, who was given twelve hundred acres of land on the Weller's Bay shore by a grateful government after he had left the army.

The alarming epidemic of coughs and colds is reaping its annual toll, and reaping it in a more harmful than usual way. The school attendance, attendance at church and community meetings and even local traffic have all been cut down by the ravages of this plague.

Friends of Mr. Earl Teasel, formerly with C. A. Sherman & Son in Simmons store at Trenton, were sorry to read in papers of the burning of much of his store and stock late last week. Mr. Teasel has been in business independently only a short time, and this loss will come as an unfortunate blow to him.

Messrs Wil La Tour and Fred Hicks took charge of excursion trains on the railroads to go to Toronto a week ago and see the Maple Leaf-Rangers game on Saturday night.

Miss Hale Pitchett spent the week end at home in Belleville with her mother, sister and brother.

Service was held on Sunday at the United Church in the afternoon and at the Anglican Church in the evening.

Mrs. E. H. Hennessey left on Monday last to go by train to Detloe, where she will spend several weeks, visiting at the system, Mrs. F. Kingrens and family. Mr. Hennessey has been there since New Years, and may return with Mrs. Hennessy in a few weeks.

Mr. David Pringle is still confined to Belleville General Hospital following his recent stroke, and we are glad to report is now slightly improved.

Mr. and Mrs. Ross Carnrite and Miss Edith of Smithfield spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Wannamaker.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Vandervoort of Belleville were Sunday visitors with Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan and family.

Mr. Allan Barker of Trenton called on Sunday at the Hennessey home.

An unknown motorist came to grief early last Tuesday morning at the checkerboard that marks the sharp turn at the canal. Apparently proceeding at an unnecessary rate of speed in strange territory, he was unable to stop in time to make the turn, and slid into the ditch to the left of the board where he struck a tree. The car, heavy guard posts, causing slight damage to the car.

Master Lloyd Hennessey spent the weekend in Trenton with his brother and family.

Mrs. Corby, aged mother of Mrs. Percy of Mount Carmel community was interred at the local cemetery on Thursday of last week.

Our own community boasts, without pride, still another horse death. This time reported from the farm of Mrs. P. Green. The horse apparently quite well on Tuesday of last week but was down in its stall at nightfall, and though a veterinary was summoned and did what he could, it was dead in the morning. In each case the trouble seems to have been indigestion, a disease which it is very difficult to treat with success. Only two weeks ago Mr. E. B. Young lost a horse soon after it was turned out for a morning's drink, the animal dying in great agony in a few minutes, and shortly before that Mr. Earl Bonter lost one. A year ago, some will remember, Mr. Harry La Tour lost his entire stock of four horses from some mysterious malady that may have been in some way related to this.

After her recent illness Mrs. A. Urquhart is much better again. Friends will be glad to know that she is able to be about again.

FAVORS 18 YEARS AS PATENT LIFE

Electrical Representative Appears Before Committee

Ottawa, Feb. 23 (CP)—The life of a Canadian patent should remain at 18 years from its issue, A. W. Lash, counsel representing the Northern Electric Company, Limited, Montreal, today told the Commons Banking and Commerce Committee considering the Patent Act amendments.

"In our opinion," he opposed changes in the act dealing with working conditions as too drastic, said the Montreal witness. It was practically impossible in most cases to work a patent on a "commercial scale" in Canada within three years after its issue as contemplated by the amendments, he told the committee.

The period may vary anywhere from four to fourteen years before a patented article can get on the market in sufficient volume to warrant its manufacture on a commercial scale as defined in the bill," said Mr. Lash. Not only manufacturers but individual inventors would encounter difficulty in operating under the working section and other sections in the measure, he held.

POSITION VALID OF LOFTUS REID

Justice McEvoy Delivers Judgment on Hydro Matter

Toronto, Feb. 28 (CP) — Mr. Justice J. A. McEvoy in a judgment delivered at Osgoode Hall follows the application of Loftus R. Reid, who alleged that Kenneth R. Cheriton, "unlawfully exercises and usurps the office of commissioner of the Toronto Hydro-Electric Commission."

"In my view," says Mr. Justice McEvoy, "a commissioner appointed to the Board of the Toronto Electric Commissioners is not a municipal officer. The board of commissioners has merely the control and management of the municipal system of electric lighting entrusted to them by the municipalities."

"I am of the further view that the commissioner may be re-appointed as successor to an office which he formerly held and of which his term had expired; he is succeeding to the office as the successor to the former incumbent. In my view the resolution of the 7th day of April, 1923 (the one in which the Toronto Commission for two years) was a valid appointment of Mr. Cheriton for the further term of two years from the date of his appointment."

LEAGUE HOLDS EUCHRE PARTY

A. Murdoff to be Manager of Royal Bank at Beeton

Stirling, Feb. 28. — The Catholic Women's League held a very successful card-party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Shea on Monday evening, Feb. 25. Progressive euchre was played and three prizes were awarded. They were distributed to the holders of the highest scores, Mrs. Chas. Fox secured first prize for the ladies and Mrs. M. Sheridan, second; Mr. M. Shea and Mr. T. MacGrath were tied with the best score for the gentlemen's prize, Mr. MacGrath winning first prize by virtue of drawing the highest card, automatically leaving Mr. Shea second. After a dainty lunch was served by the ladies the remaining portion of this very pleasant evening was spent in dancing to the music supplied by Mr. Charles Allan.

St. Andrew's Young People's Guild. The regular meeting of the St. Andrew's Young People's Guild was held in the Sunday school room on Monday evening at eight o'clock. After the devotional period and the business part of the meeting, Dr. Young of Japan gave a very interesting illustrated talk on Japan.

Dr. Young spoke of the amazing educational system of that country, referring to it as one of the finest and most complete in the world. Over ninety-five per cent of the vast population of that country can read and write. Through the medium of the newspapers they keep abreast of the times and study world-wide affairs in a remarkable way. There is a vast building program going on all the time, and western ideas are readily adopted by the people of that race. The ever increasing population makes the necessity for this building very necessary. With an annual increase in population of one million, accommodation for them is one of the growing problems. Following this very important lecture, the Young answered questions asked by members of the audience. The meeting was closed by prayer.

Rev. J. A. Kofford continued his series of illustrated sermons on the life and teachings of Jesus Christ in St. Andrew's Church on Sunday evening. So great is the interest shown in these services that a large increase in the number present is readily noticed.

Mr. Kofford spoke of one of the first miracles of our Lord, that of changing water into wine at the wedding feast. Many feel that to accept Christ is to sacrifice happiness, but the presentation of this picture shows that Christ does not wish us to be fearful or live a life of hardship and misfortune would have been spoiled if Christ had not been in keeping with Christ's blessing.

Miss Jane Moffat and Mrs. Arthur Murdoff offered a pleasing vocal duet which was much appreciated.

Mr. Arthur Murdoff, manager of the Stirling branch of the Royal Bank which has recently seen fit to discontinue operations here, has been transferred to Beeton and left on Monday, March 4. Mr. Murdoff will assume the duty of managing the branch in that town. It is expected that the family will join him as soon as he can make the necessary arrangements in that place. The best wishes of his many friends in this community go with Mr. Murdoff in his new field of activity.

Mr. Cecil Baker of Peterboro, formerly of the Bank of Montreal staff here, spent the week-end at his home in Bonarlaw, and visited with friends in Stirling.

Dr. Young of Japan who occupied the pulpit of St. Andrew's church on Sunday morning, left today for Burnbrae to address a gathering there.

Mr. Thomas Bolmes and Mr. Edward Shalsbury are in Kitchener this week representing Keystone No. 72 R.A.M. at the convention of the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons.

DOCTOR SAID SHE NEEDED "BULK" FOR HER CONSTIPATION*

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN Brings Relief to Mrs. Maneely

Read the following unsolicited letter:

"Up to five years ago, I knew no end of suffering caused by constipation. I used all kinds of laxatives but only found relief for a time. I read in the newspapers how ALL-BRAN had done for me."—Mrs. Jas. Maneely, 24 Gibbons upon record.

*Due to insufficient "bulk" in meals.

ALL-BRAN provides gentle "bulk" to help overcome common constipation. It is also a good source of vitamin B and iron.

The "bulk" of ALL-BRAN is often more effective than the "bulk" in fruits and vegetables, as it does not break down within the body. Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. If not corrected this way, see your doctor.

Isn't this food much pleasanter and safer than risking patent medicines? Get the red-and-green package at your grocer's. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

DEATH'S PLAYMATE

RICHARD CHARLES SMACK

In his 18 months of life, Richard Charles Smack, of Muskegon, Mich., has played with death five times. When he was a few months old his mother fell downstairs with him, breaking his neck. A month later he suffered severe burns. Now he fell from a bench and fractured his skull. A few weeks ago coal dust in the kitchen stove exploded and he suffered severe burns. Now he is at Mercy hospital, Detroit, fighting a second attack of pneumonia and doctors say he has a good chance to recover.

ces being held there on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

Many friends and relatives paid final tribute at the funeral of the late Mrs. Ann Elizabeth Baldrick, widow of the late James Baldrick, former merchant. Rev. Stirling, who ceased ever in Toronto on Saturday, Feb. 23, in her ninety-fifth year.

Mrs. Baldrick was a life-long worker in St. John's Anglican Church, Stirling, and an honorary life member of the Woman's Auxiliary. She was also the first president of the Stirling Horticultural Society.

Left to mourn her passing are one daughter, Mrs. L. R. Hallwell of Toronto, and three sons, Frank of Detroit, Charles of Vancouver, and Fred of Los Angeles.

The corpse, preceded from Duffin's undertaking parlors to St. John's Church, where the funeral service was conducted by Rev. A. S. McConnell, assisted by Rev. R. F. Myers of Belleville and Rev. A. B. Caldwell of Marmora. The pall bearers were H. O. Martin, James Stout, J. M. McCue, Fred Mottee, J. Belshaw and J. S. Mason. Interment was in Stirling Cemetery.

Flowers were placed in St. John's Church on Sunday morning, Feb. 24 by Mrs. George Wallace in memory of her mother who passed away a year ago. Also, on the same date, in connection with the regular service, a baptismal service was held, when Carlton George Earl Whitney was baptized.

The Young People's Society. St. Paul's Young People's Society entertained the Bethel Young People's Guild. The opening exercises and devotional period were conducted by Mr. Harry Hulin, president of the St. Paul's Society. Rev. F. Joblin led in prayer. Mr. Fred Mills, fourth vice-president, then gave a brief address of welcome to the visitors which was responded to by Rev. Joblin and Mr. Heath.

Mr. Walter Warren, president of the Bethel organization then took charge of the program. He called on Roy Welbourne to read the Scripture lesson, Mr. U. Heath then led in prayer. The topic of the evening was very capably dealt with by Mrs. Joblin, whose theme was "Does Jesus Christ draw the color line?" The speaker in her remarks brought out the fact very forcibly that Christ came not into the world for any particular race or class of people, but to all on an equal basis, while here on earth he associated with many classes. With the woman of Samaria at the well, and with officers of the ruling class of that day. Also there came to him, Greeks, seeking comfort and knowledge. He looked not at their color, nationality, or social standing, but looked deep into their personal lives. He did not approach the law abiders of the day when he was about to impart a gospel that was to influence all humanity for all time to come. Rather, he gathered about him the common people, Tabernacle, etc. Not because they were of the poor class, but because he could foresee the genuine loyalty to him. This was a most instructive topic, and appropriately dealt with. Rev. Joblin brought out some of the outstanding points at this time by questioning several present as to their views on the subject.

Master Bobbie Elliott then favored the gathering with two very fine vocal solos, "Alice in Wonderland" and "Little Man You've Had a Busy Day", the latter followed by a splendid reading by Elda MacMullen, "Dorothy Entertains the Minister". Mrs. Harold Elliott and Miss Mildred Elliott then rendered a pleasing duet, "Overture Zampa". Mrs. S. Hayton gave an unusually fine reading, "The Leper". The Misses Elliott gave two vocal duets, "Minstrel Boy" and "Cradle Song". Then a little Red Barn". Wesley Farrell put on a cat contest which was followed by community singing led by Rev. E. W. Rowland. At the conclusion of this splendid program a dainty lunch was served by the ladies of St. Paul's organization. The meeting was brought to a close by singing a hymn and repeating the Benediction.

A.Y.P.A.

The annual opening night of St. John's A.Y.P.A. was held in the community hall on Monday evening, Feb. 25. The guests began to arrive about 8:30. The early part of the program consisted of games and dancing in which every one took part. Representations were present from almost all organizations in Madoc, Marmora, Campbellford, Trenton, Christ Church, Belleville, and the Church of St. Thomas in Belleville. Lunch was served by members of the women of St. John's congregation.

Mr. Howard Morrow, president of the A.Y.P.A. made a few well chosen remarks of welcome to the visitors, after which the visiting presidents of the various organizations were called on. Rev. A. S. McConnell spoke briefly on behalf of the guests. Dancing to the music supplied by Mr. Elson was then continued throughout the evening.

CARMEL LEAGUE MEETS IN CHURCH

Carmel, Feb. 28.—At Church on Sunday afternoon many listened to a most interesting address given by the pastor, Rev. W. Marvick, his text being "Blessed are they who do hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled". The choir rendered a beautiful anthem and Miss Mary Hicks and Mr. Jack McCabe sang a duet entitled "He Knows Just How I Can tell".

Mr. Harry Dafoe and family, Mr. and Mrs. W. Simmons were entertained at Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Scott's on Saturday night and like most to the Leafs put it over the Hawks 4-1.

League was held in the church on Wednesday evening. The president, Mrs. Mildred Simmons, opened the meeting with a hymn and prayer. After letters of interest were read by the president, Miss Gunning, leader of the citizenship program, took charge. She announced a hymn and led in prayer. PRESENT GIFT TO MRS. O. FENN

Third Sidney, Feb. 26.—Allen's W. A. was held at the home of Mrs. Stanley Spafford on Thursday last. There was a good attendance, the special feature of the day being an address and presentation to Mrs. Oden Fenn who is leaving in the near future to take up residence in Toronto.

Mrs. S. Westover read the following address:

Dear Rhei: It is with deep regret that we learn of your departure from our community. You have spent practically all of your life on the old third line and we assure you, you shall be greatly missed.

We have always found you to be a true friend and neighbour. In times of joy and sorrow we have been benefitted by your help and companionship.

You have always been ready to help in church and neighborhood work, wherever and whenever possible. You have been a member of our Ladies' Aid since its organization. You have filled the office of treasurer of our Aid for the past six years, doing the work efficiently with great credit to yourself and satisfaction to all the members.

You have ever been ready to open your home to any church meetings, whenever health and circumstances permitted.

We feel your removal will mean the loss of a valued link in our chain of friendship. You shall also be greatly missed in our W. A. S. meetings. You have been an active member serving faithfully and well as pianist for a number of years.

Now that you are about to make your home in Toronto, we wish both you and your husband, health, prosperity and the best of good luck in your new undertaking. May God's richest blessing ever be with you.

We want you both to feel you are leaving good, true friends at Alkenny and that if you should come back to live among us, a hearty welcome awaits you.

Just to make your new home a little brighter we present you with this floor lamp. May its light reflect to you our love and esteem and our appreciation of your friendship and services in the past. May it ever serve to remind you of old days, old times, old neighbors and friends of Alken's community.

Signed — Mrs. A. Saylor, Mrs. Roy Finkle, Mrs. Fred Moon, Mrs. S. Westover.

Mrs. Fenn was visibly affected by the surprise but made a very fitting reply and thanked the ladies for the gift. Mr. and Mrs. Fenn will be greatly missed in this community and the best wishes of their many friends go with them to their new home.

LOVE SCHOOL

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

Taken unaware, the lovely color rushed to Faith's cheeks. "Oh, I'd love to, Hunter."

He nodded, his brilliant blue eyes resting upon her with a glint of approval. "Right-o. There'll be about ten of us. If I'm not here by half past one, Pierre will drive you there —Laurent's on the Champs Elysees."

It was silly, of course, Faith told herself, to attach so much importance to a luncheon. But he hadn't invited her out with his friends before, and if she could only win them all, it would make it so much easier —when Gertrude Stevens turned up. This was a sort of social debut, and, planning what she would wear and what she would say, Faith grew more and more nervous. She must be gay and beautiful and witty. Completely at her ease.

At least she was beautiful, she reassured herself waiting for Hunter the next day. A small black satin tricorne slanted over the silvery gold of her hair. A gardenia completed the effect of the white embroidered black satin gown and jacket that clung in soft folds to her slim young body.

But Hunter didn't come, and she had to drive alone to Laurent's. If Hunter had only been with her, she thought with increasing shyness that amounted to a panic by the time she got there! She knew so well his unbending standards.

So it was in an agony of self consciousness and with stilted little smiles that she joined him in the crowded fashionable restaurant, and acknowledged the introduction he performed with just the right shade of informality.

There seemed to be a great many people gathered about the flowered table in the glass enclosed room looking out on the gravelled paths and chestnut trees, wilting today in a hot July sun.

Everyone tried to be very nice to Hunter's new wife. In their peering darting brightness, they nipped at her with questions and glances while Madame de Luze hovered protectively at her elbow, far more the hostess than Faith.

But once seated, Madame de Luze was on the far side of the table. At the other end, opposite Faith, Hunter seemed to be enjoying himself. No wonder he was one of the most popular men in his set, Faith thought, watching the women sway toward him. She had never before seen Hunter with his friends. How relaxed and boyish he was!

Faith sat between an elderly Frenchman with a monocle and the red rosette of the Legion of Honor, and a thin youth with bored pale eyes. He asked her if she preferred Chateau Yquen to Hermitage.

"I'm afraid I don't know anything about wines," Faith said politely.

Awful bore, the Riviera, don't you think?" he tried again.

"I've never been there," Faith had to admit. She knew that she should use her very ignorance to intrigue and amuse him, but he did not seem particularly to want to be amused. Only when the woman on his left leaned over and said—"Gigi, do tell me, is Marie really going to Biarritz with her South American?' Then with great animation he turned away from Faith.

It wasn't any easier with the old gentleman on Faith's right. He mentioned an article to which he objected, in the Action Francaise, the French royalist paper. And he seemed to have a grievance against every restaurant in Paris. According to him, the unemployment problem, depression, revolutions, even wars were brought about by the lack of proper seasoning in sauces.

"I hear you eat mayonnaise on oranges in America," he said quite crossly to Faith. "Barbarous," he muttered attacking the pate de foie gras in its jellied porto wine.

Faith wasn't being a success. The women's glances fluttered away from her. Madame de Luze smiled encouragingly, and Hunter's dark blue eyes noted her silence.

It didn't help her any to feel that it was probably her own fault if she were left out of it. They hadn't slammed doors in her face; hadn't snubbed her. They simply took her shyness for affectation. And Faith toying with her crepes suzettes cooked in rum, suddenly resented and disliked them.

In a momentary hush, a pretty woman in dark blue, called to Hunter — "Didn't I read in the papers that the Stevens were sailing soon?" And turning toward Faith with the bright insolence of a privileged young matron, she asked: "D'you know Gertrude?"

"I don't know anyone,' Faith said in a low clear voice.

She had committted the unforgivable sin of making everyone uncomfortable by reminding them that Hunter had married out of his world. Madame de Luze bridged the silence with a light laugh. "The trouble with most of us is we know too many people," she tossed into the renewed hum.

Hunter didn't look at Faith. He leaned closer to the charming woman on his right.

AN UNWELCOME CALLER

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

With a dull sense of failure Faith watched Hunter bid goodbye to his guests—their guests, only she hadn't acted like much of a hostess. His tall graceful figure stood out among them. Against the foreign vista of the Avenue des Champs Elysees, dry and dazzling in the summer afternoon, life in this glass enclosed restaurant seemed very fleeting in its color and gayety. Everyone was going somewhere else, following up an engagement or a caprice. But Faith had nowhere to go.

Madame de Luze in grey and pink, stood chatting with the other women. Her small aquiline nose jutted from the frizzed and pulled forward effect of her hair under a boat shaped plumed grey hat. The thin red line of her lips looked cruel to Faith. But neither by glance nor gesture did she betray annoyance at her protegee's lack of success. For the moment, Faith simply didn't exist.

She had bored them all, Faith thought, mechanically smiling at the polite strangers who murmured an insincere pleasure at having met her. "You and Hunter must dine with us soon. We're so fond of him." "Enchante, Madame." "Shall we see you at Deauville this season, Mrs. Barclay?" Meaningless phrases. No one cared ever to see her again.

Hunter leaving a short ruddy gentleman in a Palm Beach suit moved across to Faith. "The car is waiting for you," he said formally. "You don't mind going back alone, do you? I'm playing bridge with Colonel Stockton."

"I don't mind,' Faith murmured.

The young matron in blue came up, gaily hooking her arm in Hunters. "Stockie's taking us all in his car," she said. "We'll wait outside." With a nod and wave to Faith, she moved away.

"Dont bother about me," Faith said in a small hurt voice. Why should they treat her any differently than they treated themselves? They were always casual.

She slipped past Hunter and went over to the Countess de Luze. "Can I drop you anywhere?" she offered.

Madame de Luze turned away from the elderly gentleman with the red rosette and the monocle. "Thank you, my dear," she said smiling vaguely, "but I'm having tea with the Baron."

The group had thinned out. Waiters were clearing the long table. Faith drew up her slender shoulders and walked to the door. But before she reached it, Hunter was by her side.

"Let me take you to the car," he said as if she had made another social error in not waiting for him to escore her out.

As he handed her into the motor, Faith looked up into the deep blue of his eyes "I'm sorry I was so—dull," she murmured.

He smiled with surprising sweetness. Patted her hand. "Don't' worry", he said. "Why not have Pierre drive you around the Bois? Get a little air—"

She shook her head. "No thank you." Framed by the rich dark upholstery of the coupe, her fairness seemed frail and forlorn.

Hunter's being kind to her made her all the more miserable. It was very hot. Pierre, the smart young chauffeur in his leather puttees and grey uniform, somehow increased Faith's loneliness. She couldn't even talk to him. The desire to see someone she could talk to was too much to resist. Impulsively she leaned forward and touched Pierre on the shoulder. Fumbling for the little leather book she always kept in her bag, she found and pointed to Paul Tuckerman's address.

Pierre wheeled the car around, crossed the ornate gilded bridge Alexandre III, and swept up the Boulevard Saint Germain.

Faith hadn't been in this quarter since Hunter took her away from Mary Allan's studio. The shops and cafes seemed like old friends. The groups of artists lounging over their beers on cafe terraces at the corner of the Boulevard Montparnasse, made her feel oddly at home. She wondered if she would have been any happier living among them.

Then the car turned into the rue Daguerre and drew up before the shabby old wooden house, and Pierre, departing from his reserve, was muttering anxious French words. He didn't think she could get out here.

Faith laughed. "Allez Pierre." It might not be correct French, but it was a dismissal he dared not disregard. She didn't want him to wait for her. He was still shaking his head as he drove away.

Paul answered Faith's knock. He let out a boyish whoop when he saw her, and catching hold of both of her hands, dragged her into the cluttered room.

"Don't say a word,. Just let me look at you," he cried. "Mind if I touch you to see if you're real?" But instead of laying his outstretched hand on her, he stepped back, his hazel eyes with the lights in them, fixed upon her adoringly, his fingers ruffling his hair into flame.

"My Gad, you're more beautiful than I remembered!" he exclaimed.

"Don't be silly, Paul." Faith, half laughing, sat on the edge of the monastic cot looking around her with a tightening of heart. She hadn't remembered how very poor Paul was.

"I should have brought tea and things like the first time Mary and I came, but I didn't know how to tell my chauffeur—" Faith stopped with the thought that she sounded as if she were showing off. Things taken for granted in Hunter's world didn't fit here.

But Paul didn't care how she had come. With a whirlwind motion, he dipped among cardboard boxes, papers, mik bottles. "A fellow left a bottle of red wine here last week," he said. "Where the devil?—Ah—" he held up a half filled quart bottle with a flourish. "We'll celebrate."

Faith sipped the sour stuff with pleasure. Vintage and age in wines didn't matter to Paul any more than it had to her only a few weeks ago.

"Here's to invention," she said gaily, and raised the thick cracked glass. "Hmnn—delicious."

"Are you happy?' Paul asked in his sudden direct way.

Faith set down the glass, and waited before answering. With a shock, she realised how gaunt and thin Paul had grown. His cheeks were sunken, his hands bony, restless. His body seemed emaciated in an old khaki shirt with its sleeves chopped off at the elbows. How horrible poverty was, she thought with a shiver, and her mind flashed back to the flowered table at Laurents, the well fed faces. It was hard to know what you wanted most in life.

"I should be happy," she said slowly, "and wasn't so sure today."

Paul fiddled with his glass, glancing down his long nose. "If I thought you weren't—" he muttered somberly.

It was very close in the room, oppressive with words that Paul was holding back.

The shabby walls seemed to draw in upon them. The makeshifts of want were exposed in all their pitiful ugliness, and the things that Paul lived for, cared for with all his soul—the drawings of motor parts, the model of the airplane motor —seemed to accuse Faith as an intruder who had come there to taunt their helplessness.

She was ashamed of herself in her fine clothes, her perfume, her trivial ambitions to join the smart set. A shallow girl playing at being a lady, coming here to this garret to show off; to soothe her vanity because Hunter's friends hadn't bowed down to her.

"Oh, Paul, I'm sorry," she cried penitently. "Of course I'm happy, dear. But I wish there was something I could do for you."

Paul got to his feet, his long fingers, twisting, untwisting. "That's all right, Faith." he said turning to the window. "I guess you'd better not come here any more though," he went on in a queer stifled voice. "Your husband would not like it. And—well, I guess I'd better stick to my motor," he said with a rueful little smile. "Seeing you this way sort of unsettles me."

Faith sighed, turning to the door. "It was selfish of me," she said softly. "Having what one wants doesn't always satisfy one."

Paul was standing over her white and tense. "What have they done to you?"

"It's what I've done to myself," Faith answered wearily. "I love Hunter, you know." Her beautiful grey eyes were dark with pain as she thought of how topsy-turvy everything was— that she should love Hunter and that Paul should love her. Because Paul did love her though he would never tell her so.

"You're right, Paul. I won't come again." This time she reached the door. But he followed her.

"Bless you for coming today," he said gravely.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Once more in the jungle, Tarzan threw off the Red Officer's uniform and headed for British headquarters, raging inwardly at the sentiment that had prevented him from killing Olga Boresch. Yet he realized if the same opportunity again came, he would still find it—impossible to slay a woman. The papers he brought proved valuable to the British, though now he realized Olga had kept the most important. Sickened by the sight of man waging his cruel and inhuman warfare, the ape-man decided it was no longer—his affair. Having punished the two Reds who had killed his mate, Tarzan determined to heed the insistent call of the remote jungle of his youth. He disappeared from the British camp as mysteriously as he had appeared, months before.

He planned to leave forever the haunts of man. Before him and his destination lay a trackless wilderness which his would be the first foot to cross. But that fact only spurred him on. Days later, too late, he came to regret his rash decision.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was sewing on her sewing machine and I said, Hay ma, Miss Kitty read us a story in school today about a mother berd that flew rite down in front of some hunters and got shot herself trying to detract their attention from where her little baby berds was. Do you bleeve, that, ma? I said.

Indeed I do, and if it's true of berd mothers with nothing to guide them but their instinctive instincts, just think how true it is of human mothers, ma said. There is no sacrifice too grate for a mother to make for her children, she said, and I said, Well hay, ma, will you have bake beans for supper tonite?

My goodness from the sublime to the rediculiss is a meer drop in the buckit for you, such a question, ma said, and I said, Well will you, ma?

Certainy not, Sattiday is the nite for bake beans, if at all, ma said, and I said, Well gosh, ma, G, that's just it, if we had them in the middle of the week for a change it would make it seem like a holiday, so why cant we, ma?

I've told you why; and anyway, I've ordered a nice stake and your father would be quite disappointed if he saw beans instead of a stake, ma said, and I said, Well then G wizzickers, ma, that's a good chance for you to sacrifice pop's feelings for the sake of your child.

Meening me, and ma said, When I spoke of sacrifices I was hardly thinking of beans, and I said, But jimminy, ma, you said no sacrifice would be too grate, so dont that include bake beans?

Now you look here once and for all, bake beans are too indigestible to have twice a week, ma said, and I said, All rite, ma, gosh, then it's a swell chance for you to sacrifice your digestion, and pop's too, because holey smokes ma, nothing's indigestible for me.

This subjeck had better be dropped immeeditly because it will be resumed panefully if it's resumed at all, ma said.

Wich it wasn't me proberly feeling a little better than what I would of if I hadn't even tried.

HOEBUCK ASSAILS HYDRO SYSTEM UNDER OLD RULE

Points at Niagara And Central Ontario Systems

HIGH RATES FEARED

Purchase of Power From Quebec Companies Blamed

Toronto, Feb. 26.—(CP)—With Hon. W. H. Hoobuck, Ontario Attorney-General and minister of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission continuing his address, Hydro will be the centre of the stage in the provincial legislature today.

Combining a lengthy review of the Hydro situation in the province with charges of maladministration of Hydro against the former governments of Sir Henry Drayton and George S. Henry, Mr. Hoobuck spoke for more than three hours in the Ontario Legislature yesterday and is expected to speak at length at today's session.

No session is contemplated for tonight but if Mr. Hoobuck finishes his address in time the opposition attack will be taken up by Col. W. M. Price (Nipissing-Parkdale).

The Hydro deficit for 1934 exceeded $2,000,000 and included in this was the Niagara System's deficit of 2,209,221 "as a result of a series of power purchases from the power barons of the Province of Quebec" Mr. Hoobuck declared.

Sacrifice Charged

Charging sacrifice of the Hydro System "to those interested in the financial operations of the power barons of Quebec", Mr. Hoobuck said if the Ferguson and Henry government had kept in mind the "power at cost" dream of the men who founded Hydro there doubtless the depression would not be felt to the extent it is in the province.

He blamed increased power costs on purchases of Quebec power and reported that for the year ending Oct. 31, 1934, the commission paid for Quebec power $5,457,206.

For the second day the legislature heard a reference to the payment of $60,000 to John Aird, Jr., of Toronto. Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn had written George S. Henry, opposition leader on this during the debate Tuesday and again referred to it yesterday. Mr. Hoobuck also mentioned it in his address.

Order-in-Council Produced

Mr. Hepburn produced an order-in-council signed by Mr. Henry on Oct. 30, 1930. It contained a warrant for payment of $60,000 in connection with negotiation of the Madawaska power purchase from the M. J. O'Brien interests.

"On that amount $60,000 was for payment of John Aird, Jr.," Mr. Hepburn said.

Stating he had signed the warrant without knowing it was for the payment to Aird, Mr. Henry said it was provision for winding up various accounts at the time of the Canadian Niagara Power Co. contract. Mr. Hoobuck declared that the Hydro Commission could not make this payment out of its funds.

Questioned by the Opposition Leader as to who received the $60,000 payment, Mr. Hepburn said it was Howard Ferguson, Premier at the time.

"That's all I wanted to find out," Mr. Henry asserted.

With the intention of presenting various proposed Hydro-Electric Commission's passing regulations without approval of the legislature, Wilfrid Lefebvre (Conservative-St. Denis) introduced a bill to amend the Power Commission Act.

Niagara System

The Attorney-General's address started with a review of the founding of Hydro and then examined the various systems.

In the Niagara system he found an unsatisfactory contract with the Quebec Power purchases. This, however, did not extend to the Shawinigan-Preston, Georgian Bay, Thunder Bay, Northern Ontario and Mississauga.

Costs of imported power, he expected, would increase the Niagara system deficit to $1,196,546 this year and for 1936 the deficit would be $7,093,633 when the sinking fund of $2,000,000 and Power Commission Company will be added.

Purchase Blamed

The Gaisneau Power contract of 1927, when the Commission contracted to purchase 100,000 horsepower from the Gaisneau Power Company, and purchase of the Madawaska site in 1929 were labelled "two acts of gross incompetence" during his discussion of the Eastern Ontario System.

Referring to the Madwaska purchase, Mr. Hoobuck declared "a shifter cannot be given to the whole affair by a payment of $60,000 by the Hydro Commission, approved by Order-in-Council, to a promotor named John Aird, Jr., for no apparent considerations in return."

The Eastern Hydro system had suffered from two acts of gross incompetence, Mr. Hoobuck charged. Notwithstanding the burden imposed the finances of the system had not been ruined, though they had been made unnecessarily high. Due to a vigorous policy on the part of the commissioners of the Hydro Government was to be observed in the 1934 finances. Power purchases from the Gaisneau were outlined and the attorney-general claimed that it was "little short of criminal to tie the system for 40 years to a Quebec private development." Worse deals followed, he asserted. This Gaisneau purchase was "priceless" when compared with others made by the preceding Commissioners.

Referring to the development of the Georgian Bay system, Mr. Hoobuck remarked that this system had "escaped the slaughter". The outlook was bright and he expressed the belief that probably the greedy eyes of the private power interests had overlooked this rich bonanza.

No New Worlds To Conquer

Claims of the former Government that the demand for electrical energy would jump by leaps and bounds once the depression passed were not founded on anything but an optimistic hope, Mr. Hoobuck went on. There were indications that power consumption would be increased in the future but it was idle to overrate this phase. Growth in the past was due to a variety of factory, together with slightly increasing consumption by individuals.

"But there are practically now no more worlds to conquer" the speaker said. "Future growth must depend on rural extensions, urban growth and new industries and increased consumption per capita. If the conditions in the next three years do not improve in the matter of power consumption there will be approximately 820,000,000 for the Niagara system. In 1933 we are obligated to pay for 1,557,000 horsepower of these three companies, or about half our entire capacity. Nevertheless members of this House will perhaps be amazed, as we shall be that the system has had thrust upon it, 724,000 horsepower as of December 31st, a surplus of 633,000 power which it now requires. When its full deliveries are completed in 1938, we will have 1,557,000 horsepower. Our present requirements at peak are 823,000 horsepower.

"So that if our requirements do not increase we will have over-purchased by 724,000 horsepower, or practically double our present requirements."

Painful Piles

Go Quick—Prevent Cutting—No Salves

When sore and painful Piles distress and itch, and salves give insufficient or only temporary help, and you are getting very tired; isn't it best to at once try Zemo-Cold?—the internal remedy for piles?

Dr. J. S. Leonhardt's own personal cure of his sever that the cause of Piles was internal—bad circulation—and in the lower bowel—the hemorrhoidal veins filled with stagnant blood—and that the right and safe way to get freedom from Piles was to first remove the cause with an internal medicine. Immediately the doctor set to work to find a remedy that succeeded and called his prescription ZEMO-COLD.

Pile sufferers everywhere are benefitting by Dr. Leonhardt's internal treatment so why doubt or delay longer when J. B. McKeown and other good druggists say, "No better what kind of Piles you have or how long you've suffered, you must show you the safe clean way to get rid of your pile misery at once—back."

Faked 'Old Masters' Gets Prison Term

Grandson of Noted Painter Get Big Prices For Reproductions

Pontainebleau, France, Feb. 26. —(AP)—Jean Charles Millet, grandson of J. F. Millet who painted "The Angelus", today was sentenced to six months in prison and fined 500 francs for faking "Old Masters" and selling them at the prices genuine works would bring. The artist's mother was confirmed for their assessment. The person behind the scenes remains unidentified.

HEIRESS TO STATLER

Pinehurst, N.C., Feb. 26.—(AP)—Mrs. H. Bradley Davidson, Jr., 22, former Ilva Statler, heir of E. M. Statler of hotel fame, died today of what her physician described as carbon monoxide poisoning. The bride of less than two months was taken from beneath the steering wheel of her automobile in her garage at Edgewood.

LIFE, DEATH, LIFE—DEATH

W. A. Strange, of Tyler, Texas, was dead for five minutes and brought back to life again by adrenal injection. Now Strange is dead tired—the time for good, the doctor says. Strange reported nothing but blackness during his first "dead" period. He is shown here after revival.

Ida Lupino, Richard Arlen and Mona Maris appear in "Ready For Love" now playing at the Capitol.

WOMEN PROTEST RENT RELIEF CUT

Say Unemployed Girls Can't Get By on One Dollar Week

Toronto, Feb. 28 (CP)—Protest against the recent action of the Ontario government in reducing the rent allowance to unemployed single women from $8.00 to $4.00 a month was made to Hon. David A. Croll, Minister of Welfare and Municipal Affairs, yesterday by a deputation headed by Miss Helen Roberts of Toronto.

Miss Roberts told the minister rooms with cooking facilities cannot be obtained by girls for $1.00 a week. The food allowance is $2.50 a week and it is necessary as a result to live in one room unless their meals and effect rigid economies in order to get by.

"Girls will be driven to the streets if their rent allowance is cut to $1.00 a week. They can't get by on $3.00," Miss Roberts said.

The minister promised consideration of the protest.

Spook's Spooking Started as Joke

Daysland, Alta., Feb. 28 (CP) —Mrs. Sandall's spook has taken the count.

In fact, the spook who wasn't a spook at all has been "out" for three weeks and the folks who "knew" say it's a good thing it's out of the picture.

For over two weeks the mysterious doings on the farm of Mr. and Mrs. Lenig Lansing, five miles south of Daysland and 35 miles southeast of Edmonton, attracted attention. The antics included spoons darting through the air, pans slipping into drinking water and food and a dozen other such happenings.

Investigation has shown the "strange things" originally were started as a prank merely on the Lansing family. When the news got abroad and curiosity was the keen cause to Daysland in its search for the ghost. The antics were confirmed for their amusement. The person behind the pranks remains unidentified.

Prestige Carries With it Grave Responsibilities

BY LOUIS E. BISCH M.D., F.E.D. Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.).

Persons who tread the ordinary walks of life and remain more or less unheralded and unknown sometimes look with longing to the places of the high and the prominent. They envy them who have prestige.

There is no gainsaying that prestige is an asset which has many far-reaching advantages. The possessor of prestige is admired and glorified. He or she, as the case may be, is photographed, written up, quoted and fussed over. Whatever celebrities say or do, even if it be something quite commonplace, is enhanced by the very fact that they instead of others, do it. When a prominent person makes a bromidic remark such as, "Family life is the bulwark of the nation," the same becomes as impressive as though an oracle had spoken.

One would naturally suppose that he who possesses prestige is surely a fortunate pet of the gods.

If we talk with people of prestige, if we know them intimately, or if we get them to unburden themselves and confide in us privately, we find a very different state of affairs.

We find for instance, that prestige carries responsibilities which are anything but pleasant. The person with prestige loses, in the first place, practically all his privacy. Those in the public eye must be the most careful lest any act of theirs be misinterpreted.

Prominent individuals, furthermore, are objects of envy and jealousy. They cannot always be sure of their friends or of the sincerity of their associates.

Three types of prestige may be recognized. There is prestige gained through birth, that which happens because of accident and that which is gained through personal effort.

Members of royal families, or the children of the rich or socially prominent gain prestige through birth. They are what they are.

Accidental prestige may be said to befall a man or woman who happens suddenly to become wealthy through an accident, or through a fortunate upswing of the stock market, or through marrying one who already has prestige.

The third variety, the sort that is earned, is the kind Americans are interested in most.

This is the third reward of hard work, of brains, of perseverance, effort, concentration. It is the other value that go to make up forward-driving Americans men and women.

Political prestige is something many can acquire, and it is a most dangerous kind. Often such influence is not used in the right direction, but to secure collusions and to cater to petty ambitions and dubious influences.

Yes, prestige carries with it grave responsibilities. In point of fact, prestige cannot afford to make mistakes. Those whom Dame Fortune has endowed upon are often made to suffer.

DR. BISCH'S DAILY DIET HINT

Even if nursing should be considered inadvisable, the mother should always give her baby the advantages of mother's milk whenever possible. Weaning should start life strong and lusty, and the longer the baby is nourished on regular infant's disease is much less than if they are brought up on a cow's milk formula.

'Sealers' Depart for Another Season's Kill

St. John's, Nfld., Feb. 28.—(CP Cable)—"Bloody decks to ye Byes!" was the hearty farewell raised out across the St. John's waterfront to day as the vanguard of Newfoundland's sealing fleet steamed out of harbor for another season in the northern ice.

The old sealing vessel Ranger, with her 173 seal-killers aboard, bound for channel on the south coast, where she will be until the other ships from the north put out up the east coast March 6, in search of the hundreds of thousands of seals in the "main patch".

East-Toronto Folk Feel Earth Shaks

Toronto, Feb. 28.—East-end residents of Toronto were made uneasy again yesterday by earth tremors which rattled dishes and shook the houses. Similar shocks occurred a few weeks ago during a cold spell and William Carroll, seismologist at the Toronto Meteorological office, said he thought the ground isn't quite settled in this section of the city on account of various waterworks operations. The ground movements were attributed to frost.

their rivals and many times missed golden opportunities. Gordon Ruttan gave Claude Ruttan a perfect pass as he rounded the defence to beat McKinnon for the first counter. This gave new life to Wooler and they literally ran amuck with Stenburg counting on Gordon Ruttan's pass. Roy Smith took a pass from Stenburg in front of McKinnon and he drilled it home as he usually does in the same position.

Brighton worked hard but were stopped from getting into a scoring position by the close-checking Woolerites. The final counter came shortly before the closing bell when Stenburg drifted one through a crowd of players that blocked McKinnon's view.

This was the second defeat of Brighton in nine games. Urzuski, Shannon and Wright played a good game at defence but Wooler were just too good last night. Smith, Waddling and Lambert were the choice of the forwarcs. The three Ruttans, Claude, Carm and Gordon with Roy Smith were the pick of the winners and will be hard to beat in the finals.
